Headline: edHEALTH Announces New National Relationship with CoreSource for Benefits Administration

Sub-headline: Nationally known third party administrator (TPA) enters into agreement with edHEALTH for nationwide benefits administration

Body: CoreSource, a leading national provider of benefit plan administration and care management services for self-funded employee health benefit plans, announced today a new nationwide relationship with edHEALTH, an innovative program, originally started by Massachusetts colleges and universities, which assists its member educational institutions in administering their self-funded employee health benefit plans. CoreSource will serve as the national benefits administrator for edHEALTH as the company expands its footprint into new markets throughout the U.S. market.

CoreSource is thrilled to be working with a program so closely aligned with CoreSource's own values, working together in a collaborative atmosphere to find flexible solutions which are client-focused yet still member-centric, and in keeping with CoreSource's own commitment to client satisfaction.

Tracy Hassett, President of edHEALTH, expressed excitement at the new relationship, saying "edHEALTH is delighted to partner with CoreSource nationally to provide educational institutions with best in-class health plan services, building on our Massachusetts and Rhode Island success in bending the medical plan cost curve"

Robert Wolfkiel, CoreSource Northeast Region President, called the relationship "an outstanding opportunity for CoreSource to partner with edHEALTH and deliver even greater value to edHEALTH's clients and members," adding "we look forward to working closely with edHEALTH to help their clients meet and exceed their own financial goals, now and in the future."
