

Trevor Sharon:

The wheels of justice turn slow. This is not something quick. I always tell them that you have to continue with your life. You can't just shut down. A lot of people aren't sleeping, but the fact is this is a long process. You need to continue your life, keep going to work, keep going to school, put your trust in us and let us deal with that situation. You need to focus on your life. I wanted to work with people and specialize in human rights and help people out with their problems, situations that they find themselves in. And so I went to law school to get a law degree, so I could pursue that passion. I really enjoy the human element. I enjoy helping someone out there at a low point in their life. Most of our clients have never been in trouble before, and they made a mistake. And it's no greater feeling giving someone their life back. A big hug and a big smile after handing someone their dismissal papers. It feels good hearing someone's relief after you win their case.
