Winter is always a busy season at The Sanctuary, with the elephants choosing to spend more time in and around the heated barns. This winter was no exception, as The Sanctuary readied with 24-hour’s notice to provide emergency care to African elephant, Nosey. Since her arrival, Care Staff have celebrated many milestones alongside Nosey, as she has begun to explore her natural habitat and become an active participant in her daily health care.

With cooler months coming to an end, all of the elephants at The Sanctuary have begun to venture farther from the heated barns and deeper into their expansive habitats. Now in her 23rd year at The Sanctuary, Tarra was the first to travel to Asia’s large habitat this spring, while Shirley, who will celebrate her 70th birthday in July, preferred to nap in the sun. In Africa Habitat, Sukari, Tange, and Flora have been making the most of the mud brought on by regular rainfalls. And in Q, spring means more social time in large habitat areas for Sissy, Minnie, Ronnie, Billie, and Debbie.

LETTER FROM OUR CEO

Dear Friends,

At The Sanctuary, we pride ourselves on the amazing supporters who share our values, who understand that elephants are intelligent creatures with complex physical and social needs, who support our mission, and who believe that people can and must make a difference in protecting wild elephants so that the species can survive for generations to come.

Your support means that this spring we prepare to celebrate Shirley’s 70th birthday and her 18th year at The Sanctuary. Last November, friends and donors to The Sanctuary made it possible for us to welcome Nosey with less than 24-hour’s notice and ensured that we are able to provide her with daily individualized care from a team of professional Veterinary and Care Staff. Your support also helped us reach almost 6,000 students wanting to learn about elephants in classrooms in more than 40 states and 14 countries. With you as partners and a special gift from the Trust of Legacy member, Mark Hopkins Schell, The Sanctuary can expand our support of international projects working to create a better world for elephants around the globe through mahout training programs, research and conservation.

Because of you, we are able to make great strides for the elephants in our care, be prepared for those to come, educate the next generation about elephants and help create a world where elephants flourish in the wild.

You are making a difference. Thank you for your support. Thank you for allowing us to be home to Sukari, Flora, Tange, Shirley, Tarra, Sissy, Minnie, Ronnie, Debbie, Billie and Nosey—together, we can create a better world for all elephants.

Africa Habitat & Barn

Flora, Tange, and Sukari stayed busy and engaged throughout the colder winter months with innovative enrichment items created by Care Staff. The elephants enjoyed hay bales stuffed with produce and popcorn, bubble blowers, marshmallow fluff spread on the barn walls, and of course, an assortment of evergreen trees courtesy of The Sanctuary’s 2nd Annual Christmas Tree Drive.

The Sanctuary collected more than 200 trees thanks to generous donors across Middle Tennessee. Care Staff covered the trees in hay and placed them around the habitat for the elephants to find; Caregivers especially enjoyed watching Tange carry trees from place to place with her tusks. The Christmas Tree Drive helps to supplement the elephants’ foraging opportunities during the winter.

The colder months also allowed ample time for Caregivers to work on new training behaviors with all three elephants, particularly tusk radiographs. Radiographs allow Caregivers to examine any cracks or internal damage within the tusk. Prior to taking a radiograph image, Caregivers familiarize the elephant with all equipment to minimize the time that the elephant needs to hold her tusk in place.

While the winter weather limited the elephants’ time outside the barn, they still made use of their expansive habitat on warmer, sunny days. On a recent afternoon in January, Sukari dug a new mud wallow in North Yard near the barn. Each elephant took turns taking a dip in the mud that day, and Flora has been seen utilizing it several times since.
Any time Sukari and Tange have been apart, they have later reunited with loud, excited trumpeting. One day, Tange was waiting for Sukari to exit the barn, but she got so eager for Sukari to join her that she bolted back into the barn to get her.

Sukari and Flora’s bond has deepened, as seen by their more frequent touching over fence lines (sometimes Tange joins in as well). Sukari recently approached Flora with a bundle of hay, dropping it off near her as if she was purposely giving it to Flora. Flora took the hay, and Sukari then walked off. Caregivers appreciate watching these relationships develop while also continually monitoring elephant behaviors to ensure a safe and positive environment for their interactions.
On recent sunny days, Shirley and Tarra have been seen venturing to the hilltop in Pond Yard to check for produce scatters left by Caregivers to promote foraging—or napping in the middle of the habitat, soaking up rays before heading back to the barn for the night.

Sand piles were added throughout the habitat and in Shirley’s barn stall, which have allowed her to comfortably lie down to rest and sleep. Before the sand pile was added to the barn, Shirley had never been observed lying down inside, but she now lies down to sleep almost every night, sleeping for six to eight hours.

Sand piles are just one example of how individualized care from The Sanctuary’s professional team of Veterinarians and Caregivers have allowed 69-year-old Shirley to age gracefully in a natural habitat and make choices about her daily life.

Shirley’s individual care plan includes epoxy foot treatments, daily arthritis supplements, anti-inflammatory medications, and multi-wavelength cold laser therapy to reduce discomfort associated with arthritis and other joint conditions. Sunscreen and botanica cream are applied regularly to help prevent and treat sunburn that has begun to affect Shirley more as her skin thins with age. Caregivers regularly collect imaging of bones, joints, and teeth to monitor and diagnose health issues.
As Shirley followers know, her right hind leg was broken during her time with the circus, more than 40 years ago. As it healed, several bones in her leg fused together, creating an abnormal angle and shape and a sequestrum (devitalized bone under the skin that cause periodic sores and localized drainage). Laser therapy, hydrotherapy, and treating her for pain, swelling, and infection are all ways our Veterinarians effectively manage symptoms and maintain Shirley’s health.

“Shirley is an amazing healer,” said Dr. Steve Scott, The Sanctuary’s Director of Veterinary Services. “The fact that she could survive a fracture of that magnitude and walk today is amazing.”

While The Sanctuary looks forward to celebrating Shirley’s 70th birthday this July, Caregivers also ensured that Tarra had plenty of treats on her 44th birthday in February. She received a strawberry cake, surrounded by bamboo, apples, carrots, watermelon, and hay-filled tires. She immediately stuffed all the bamboo in her mouth before eating the rest of the produce.

Caregivers have also begun to supply Tarra with new enrichment items in recent months, including hanging nets filled with hay. While most elephants use their trunk to pull out bits of hay, Tarra grasps the entire net and shakes it vigorously to dump out all of the hay at once. She has also begun to engage with hanging pine trees stuffed with hay, and consumed an entire tree over a three-day period. Caregivers look forward to more warm spring days ahead when both Tarra and Shirley will spend increased time outdoors, exploring the far reaches of their habitat and engaging with their surroundings.
It has been an exciting few months for Billie, Debbie, Minnie, Ronnie, and Sissy. Sissy, who moved from Asia Habitat to Quarantine Habitat in July of last year, shared space for the first time in November with Ronnie, and then with both Ronnie and Minnie. The elephants spent several hours together during their “play dates.” Ronnie and Sissy shared their breakfast one morning, and Minnie and Sissy were even spotted napping together one afternoon in January.

In the wild, elephants spend their entire lives with the herd into which they were born, and it would be unusual for female Asian elephants to form social bonds outside of their family herds. Captive elephants, however, have different social experiences—often developing close familial relationships with non-related elephants. Caregivers look forward to creating more socialization opportunities for Ronnie, Minnie, and Sissy in the future.

Care Staff have also monitored the developing relationship between Billie and Ronnie, who recently shared space for the first time in weeks. After a few squeaks from Billie, the elephants touched each other’s faces, trunks, and feet and then enjoyed their snacks together.

Anniversary celebrations have been plentiful, with Billie, Debbie, and Ronnie’s 12th anniversaries in February and Minnie’s at the end of January. We also celebrated Sissy’s 50th birthday, making The Sanctuary home to five elephants age 50 or older. To honor this milestone birthday, Caregivers baked Sissy a vegan carrot cake and surrounded it with sweet potato and fresh fruit. They also created a mound of tires filled with bamboo and fresh produce for Sissy to enjoy.

While chronic, progressive conditions such as arthritis and foot disease are common in aging, captive elephants, Sissy also requires individualized care for a more unique situation: her partially-paralyzed trunk. Sissy does not have full use and range of motion of her trunk, which records indicate may be due to a dental procedure that took place prior to her retirement. Both Sissy and her team of Caregivers and Veterinarians have developed adaptations to manage this condition.
For example, most elephants are trained to put their trunks to their foreheads to facilitate the trunk wash procedure, a screening to test for tuberculosis. Since Sissy cannot perform this motion, she instead flings her trunk to the top of the barn wall and rests it on the wall while Caregivers complete the procedure. Similarly, Sissy will use her trunk to throw the water hose up to her mouth because she cannot hold water in her trunk like most elephants do. She has even learned to test the water first to ensure it is not too hot and can kink the hose to stop water flow if she isn’t ready to drink.

Caregivers strive to find enrichment that Sissy can use with her limited trunk mobility, and bamboo has been a popular item for her and Billie, Debbie, Minnie, and Ronnie alike in recent months. Between bamboo shaker tubes filled with produce or grain, whole bamboo stalks scattered in the habitats, or small bamboo branches in the barns, there has been a lot of bamboo harvested and consumed in Q Habitat lately.

In addition to bamboo enrichment, the elephants have spent time interacting with their habitat. Debbie and Ronnie were observed running around in the Night Yard Extension, climbing a dirt mound, and ripping up trees, and Billie was spotted chasing turkeys one warm afternoon. All five elephants have been spending more time outside to take advantage of the weather as spring arrives.

Caring for a 9,000 lb Elephant Takes a Team that INCLUDES YOU

In the wild, elephants will spend 18 hours or more a day foraging for food. In captivity, an elephant’s life looks very different. Planning and maintaining a high-quality diet for an elephant that weighs 9,000 pounds takes teamwork and professional oversight.

At The Sanctuary, each elephant has an individual dietary plan to meet her specific nutritional needs. Caregivers start their day at 7 a.m. and work into the evening, preparing meals for the elephants and then delivering them in the 2,700-acre habitat. Restaurant-grade produce is ordered weekly and has to be chopped into portions for meals. Grains are measured, supplements weighed and hay divided. Diets change seasonally as the elephants take full advantage of the diverse natural habitats.

An elephant’s weekly diet includes hay, Mazuri, spinach, peanut butter, fresh produce such as carrots, apples, sweet potatoes, celery, bananas, squash, broccoli, oranges, grapes, watermelon and nutritional supplements to assist with normal age-related changes.

Additionally, Caregivers provide food in goal-oriented ways that encourage natural foraging skills, as well as sensory activities, walking longer distances and enhancing brain function. For Billie, a 56-year-old Asian elephant who has arthritis, Caregivers provide a trail of food for her to follow with a favorite treat at the end. This promotes foraging and encourages her to take longer walks to alleviate stiff joints.

Providing Tange, Flora, Sukari, Nosey, Shirley, Tarra, Sissy, Debbie, Ronnie, Minnie and Billie with the care they need to live a healthy life takes a team that INCLUDES YOU.

Welcoming Nosey

Many of The Sanctuary’s supporters and lovers of elephants everywhere have been following the story of Nosey—a 36-year-old African elephant who has spent nearly all her life traveling and performing across the US with the Liebel Family Circus.

In early November 2017, Nosey was seized by Lawrence County Animal Control in Moulton, Alabama after concerns for her care and well-being were raised by the public. The Sanctuary was contacted to provide emergency care and Nosey arrived in Tennessee soon after.

Since her arrival, Nosey has spent her time discovering The Sanctuary. Day by day, she has been making greater use of her habitat. She has spent time exploring the woods—stretching her trunk far into the trees to pull down leaves and branches and using her tusks to debark them. She has been observed utilizing the sand pile and scrub brush in her habitat. Nosey is also receiving regular hose baths from Care Staff—which she often follows up with a mud bath in the many wallows she’s dug for herself since her arrival. In addition to stripping bark and leaves from branches provided by Care Staff, Nosey has also figured out how to recover treats from inside enrichment devices. This process encourages Nosey to use natural foraging behavior.

Along with year-round access to a heated barn and diverse environmental enrichment in a spacious natural habitat, Nosey and all the elephants at The Sanctuary receive daily individualized veterinary and husbandry care in a Protected Contact setting.

In Protected Contact, Veterinary and Care Staff manage elephants using positive reinforcement. A physical fence barrier offers protection for both Care Staff and the elephant and also helps to build trust, with the assurance that Care Staff will never attempt to establish dominance and there will never be a punishment when an elephant chooses not to participate or walk away. At The Sanctuary, we have seen elephants transform though this management style. Shortly after transitioning to Protected Contact Management, Asian elephant Billie, who had been living at The Sanctuary for five years, allowed Caregivers to remove her ankle chain—the last vestige of her life as a circus elephant.
Nosey began to make strides in Protected Contact almost immediately upon her arrival. She has learned to follow a bamboo target to position her feet and body relative to the Protected Contact training walls in the barn and habitat in order for Veterinarians to safely deliver hands-on care and collect diagnostics. Nosey is very motivated by special food rewards—seeming to especially enjoy Mazuri, watermelon, cantaloupe, and pumpkins.

While the legal process regarding Nosey’s custody continues—a date has yet to be set for the appeal that was filed in response to the judge’s initial custody order—the Sanctuary would like to extend its deepest gratitude to every person that used their voice to speak out for Nosey and continues to advocate for the better treatment of elephants in captivity and the wild.

A shift in public attitude regarding the use of elephants in performance has led to tighter measures protecting elephants, and could lead to the retirement of more elephants in the future. Four states and more than 135 other localities in 37 states have passed various restrictions governing the use of wild animals in circuses and traveling shows. New York and Mississippi have banned public contact with some species commonly used in circuses (such as elephant rides). California and Rhode Island have both outlawed use of the bullhook and other devices to control elephants. And in Canada, there are local bans on the use of animals in circuses in 28 municipal jurisdictions including Vancouver.

To improve the lives of captive elephants, The Sanctuary encourages you to engage your friends and family in conversations about elephant welfare, contact your elected representatives, and support legislation benefiting elephants and other exotic animals.
The Elephant Sanctuary in Tennessee is pleased to announce a generous bequest from the Mark Hopkins Schell Trust in support of elephant welfare and conservation efforts around the world.

Mark Hopkins Schell—a philanthropist, model, actor, and business owner—was outraged by the poaching of elephants and rhinos and the consequential threat of extinction. Mr. Schell understood elephants’ vital ecological role as a keystone species. His hope was that this gift would be used to bring about greater public awareness and support to the crisis facing animals in the wild and benefit the welfare of elephants in captivity.

“Mark felt it was our collective responsibility to protect nature. Spreading awareness of the issues and finding solutions is something he thought about and hoped that his gifts could benefit,” said Pamela Thorsch, life-long friend and Trustee.

To honor Mark’s legacy and contribution, The Elephant Sanctuary is awarding gifts for the 2018 calendar year to international organizations working to protect elephants in the wild, and promoting practices to improve the well-being of captive elephants around the globe. The Sanctuary collaborates with and supports international organizations on four continents: Africa, Europe, Asia, and South America. Their programs focus on elephant-human conflict, anti-poaching, habitat preservation, field work to add to the knowledge of elephants, rescue and rehabilitation, improved management and care in captivity, and providing veterinary care.

“Mr. Schell’s bequest allows The Sanctuary to expand international giving to help create a world where elephants no longer live under constant threat of poaching, habitat loss, conflict, or capture—and captive elephants are able to live out their lives in habitats dedicated to their well-being,” said Janice Zeitlin, CEO of The Elephant Sanctuary.

In late December, The Sanctuary’s Board reviewed global projects and proposals for elephant conservation and welfare and has awarded gifts to the following organizations:
