How are human, animal, and environmental health linked?

The relationship between antibiotic-resistant infections in humans and antibiotic use in agriculture is complex, but antibiotics are important tools to preserve the future for people and animals alike.

Using the “One Health” concept and pig farming as a case study, Dr. Fleck will guide attendees through a live virtual pig farm tour at a working pig farm, and address how human health professionals, farmers, and veterinarians are focused on protecting the effectiveness of antibiotics for human and food animal care.
