What is Butalbital and How Does it Work?

Butalbital is a medication primarily used to treat various types of headaches, including tension headaches and migraines. It belongs to a group of drugs known as barbiturates. Butalbital works by affecting the central nervous system, promoting a sense of calm and helping to relieve pain. The medication can also be prescribed to treat anxiety and muscle spasms.

Forms and Dosages

Butalbital is available in various forms, including:

Tablets (50mg, 100mg, and 500mg)

Capsules (50mg and 100mg)

Elbows or capsules with a combination of butalbital, acetaminophen, and caffeine (containing 50mg or 100mg of butalbital)

The dosage recommended for each condition may vary. Typically, the starting dose for headache relief is 50-100mg every 4 hours as needed, not exceeding 600mg in a 24-hour period. Always follow the doctor's instructions and the label directions on the packaging.
