

INSTRUCTIONS MODULE 10 DP POLS 2280:

Background: Chapter 10 and the information in Module 10 contains a great deal of direction on how you might find and use sources to develop ideas for research in political science.

If you need background information with the questions, use:

Chapter 10 of the Book PDF I am attaching.

or

https://mediaspace.kennesaw.edu/media/Chapter+10%2C+Lecture+1/1_8arqsq3f

https://mediaspace.kennesaw.edu/media/Chapter+10%2C+Lecture+2/1_hwqil18n

Prompt: Crafting questions for interviews or surveys is one of the most important things researchers have to do. Question wording, order, and length—among other things—can create unintended consequences in one’s research if not carefully considered. With this in mind, follow the directions below...

You’re trying to design three questions for an interview or survey. Your research question is as follows: Why do governments perpetrate genocide?

First, which method is better, Interviews or surveys? Design three questions that might help answer this research question (complex though it is). What are the main considerations you have when designing these questions?