

DR. EHSAN ESMAEILI

HAND & MICROVASCULAR SURGERY

Residency: Spartanburg Regional Healthcare System - General Surgery

Fellowship: University of Connecticut, Orthopaedic Surgery of the Hand

Think about the millions of tasks performed by our hands every day: They feed us, dress us, take care of us and nurture others. We essentially explore our world with them. Now think about life without the use of these essential tools.

Dr. Ehsan Esmaili wants to ensure that you'll never have to experience that scenario.

"The hands essentially are one of the only organs that most people don't appreciate until there's a problem," he says. "Once you lose them, you understand their value. Restoring function and helping those who experience pain to live pain-free – it's a good feeling."

It's just the feeling you'll get at South Florida Hand and Orthopaedic Center, where Dr. Esmaili, along with his partner, Dr. Kenneth Garrod, works to relieve ailments of the hand and upper extremity.

From the receptionists to the medical assistants and X-ray techs, the friendly, warm, caring staff is there to make your visit a comfortable experience.

Your individualized treatment doesn't end after surgery. In fact, one of the most unique aspects of this practice is the continuity of care that extends through to occupational therapy, all done in-house, under the supervision of a highly skilled surgeon.

"We hold your hand from day one, until it's all said and done," Dr. Esmaili says.

That's because he wants all his patients to feel at home, he says: "We're a traditional mom and pop practice. We know it's not always easy when someone comes into the doctor's office, especially for surgical treatment. But we treat everyone like family. I want my patients to know that we're compassionate, honest, upfront surgeons who only want the best results for our patients. I like to equate that to: What comes out of my mouth is what my mom or dad would hear."

Rest assured: You're in good hands.
