system during treatment. Each of our clients' family members receive their own family therapist and may participate in treatment through clinical impact visits, workshops and residential family restructuring."

Caron Ocean Drive provides evidence-based treatment, tailored to a very unique clientele - affluent individuals dealing with addiction, wealth, power and privilege. Caron addresses their specific needs in a comforting, nurturing environment that aligns with their lifestyle and allows flexibility to attend to business and family while recovering.

"Our staff is made up of the to remove me from the work I do,” says Phoenix Adams, Managing Director at Caron Ocean Drive. But it wasn't always that way.

Before coming to Caron, Adams was punching the clock as a human resources manager with a big company. It was nice, but something was missing.

"I felt like a square peg in a round hole," Adams says. "I wanted to do frontline work - to make an impact with human beings, not just in the workplace, but in their lives."

He went back to school, earned a master's in social work from Florida Atlantic University and found his calling. He'd never considered a career in addiction treatment before. In fact, he had completely discounted it.

"As a loved one of someone who has suffered with addiction, I know the impact that it can have on a family," he says. "I felt too close to it."

The very reason Adams had avoided going down that road was what propelled him in that direction - helping the whole family.

"It's not only one person but the whole family that needs treatment to get well," he says. "Caron is the industry leader in addressing the whole family best in the industry, and I am proud to be a part of that," Adams says. "I frequently hear from our alumni, expressing their appreciation. Recently, a daughter of a former patient called and said, 'It's been two years since you gave my mother back to me. I just wanted to thank you. This program saved her life and our family.'

"What a privilege and an honor to be part of that experience. How could I not be passionate about that? How could I not love that?"
