HISTORY OF THE HOUSE

In 1928 Count Natale and Countess Ida Louise Labia commissioned Fred Glennie to design a residence for their family on the land they had acquired in Muizenberg. The land had been the site of another small house called The Fort; this house was demolished to make way for the grander Labia residence which was also named The Fort. The house was to serve, not only as a family home, but also as the official Italian Legation in Cape Town.

By December 1928 the first set of drawings for the residence was submitted to the Cape Town City Council for approval. By September 1929 the plans for the garden, outbuildings and the salt water swimming pool were added.

Work began on the house in 1929 and it was ready for occupation by 1930.

The house consists of a basement, a ground floor, a first floor and an attic. Stylistically the building is very difficult to categorise. The plain architectural style is reminiscent of 19th Century English architecture, with elements of the English Arts and Crafts movement in its basic design. The exterior of the house is, however, embellished by tiles and fountains which give it an Italianate appearance. The interior decoration endorses this Italian ambience.

The Labia Family moved into their new home in June 1930 and the first reception held at The Fort was on 12th November 1930, in honour of King Victor Emmanuel III of Italy's birthday. Subsequently the house became a meeting place for the rich and famous and a venue for many glittering receptions.

The Labia Family lived at The Fort from 1930 until Count Labia's death in 1936. From 1936 to 1961 the house remained empty except for summer holiday visits, when the family would move in along with all the staff necessary to bring the house to life.

The Princess and her sons Joseph and Luccio (the younger boy was called), lived at Hawthornden throughout the Second World War. Although an Italian national,

THE HISTORY of the Sir J.B. Robinson and Labia Family Art Collection

The history of the Natale Labia Collection is essentially that of the Robinson Collection. My grandfather, Sir J.B. Robinson, after whom the Collection is named, was born in Cradock in the Eastern Cape in 1840. After playing a leading role in the development of Kimberley as a diamond mining centre, he moved to the Transvaal in 1886 and shortly afterwards established the first gold mine on the Witwatersrand, still today the richest gold producing area in the world. As he became increasingly involved in the financial aspects of mining, he decided to settle, for a while at least, in London, and in 1894 bought the lease of Dudley House, a large mansion owned by the Dudley family in Park Lane. He was then fifty-four, and despite a background of rugged pioneering and accompanying rivalries, sometimes bitter, of other mining magnates, he soon became deeply involved in the task of collecting pictures, furniture and objects of art worthy of his new home.

In 1910 he decided to return to his old home in Cape Town, Hawthornden, and the entire contents of Dudley House were put into storage. In 1957 my mother, Princess Ida Labia, who had inherited the Collection on my father's death in 1929, asked me to investigate the condition of the pictures after their long period of isolation. On a cold morning in December I was admitted to the warehouse in Ladbroke Grove, London, where the Collection had been put in storage about a third of a century previously. There in front of me lay a veritable Aladdin's Cave of artistic treasures – an incredible assortment of Old Masters paintings, 18th century gilt furniture, objects of art of all kinds, and even some magnificent Victorian carriages and cars. To my relief the Old Masters turned out to be in remarkably good condition, and in the following year they again saw the light of day at the Royal Academy Exhibition at Burlington House, which was followed shortly by the exhibition in the National Gallery Cape Town.

After my mother's death in 1961, it was no longer possible to keep the Collection as a single entity, and the paintings were divided between my brother and myself.

INTRODUCING A CALCIUM SUPPLEMENT THAT GETS TO THE HEART OF THE MATTER

Imagine a Vitamin could keep Calcium in your bones and out of your arteries?
Vitamin K2 may be the solution to keeping Calcium in its place!

HEALTHY BONES

Calcium is essential for building healthy bones, but without Vitamin K2 our bodies cannot use Calcium effectively.

Studies show that Vitamin K2 is vital for bone health because it activates a unique protein (osteocalcin) that is necessary to bind Calcium effectively to the bones, otherwise Calcium is lost into the bloodstream which can be detrimental to both your bones and your arteries!

HEALTHY HEART

Excess Calcium build up in the cardiovascular system may lead to arterial calcification. Besides keeping Calcium in the bones, Vitamin K2 activates a vascular protein (MGP) that restrains circulating Calcium from being deposited in the vessel walls, thereby protecting the blood vessels and heart valves from calcification.

Natural Vitamin K2 is the essential Vitamin for effective Calcium utilisation in the bones and arteries, and now it's available as the key ingredient in a unique new combination therapy called MenaCal.7.

MenaCal.7 is a unique Calcium Supplement with natural Vitamin K2 as MenaQ7 and Vitamin D3 for effective Calcium utilisation.

MenaCal.7's 3 ingredients work synergistically which may assist with:

- Building and maintaining strong bones
- Preventing the calcification of the heart and arteries
- Promoting blood vessel elasticity

For natural K2 look for the Q!

We are proud to announce that our key ingredients, natural Vitamin K2 as MenaQ7, recently received the prestigious 2008 Food & Sullivan Product Innovation of the Year Award.

Simply take 1 a day and take control over your Calcium!

Your bones and heart will thank you
