I received the Peek-a from Mobi - a development mirror for infants and decided to try it out. The shatter-resistant, premium mirror is bordered by a sensory soft pastel coloured frame made of food-grade silicone and is senselessly soft to the touch.

The winning feature is the ergonomics of this design - the supporting stand can be pushed back to lay flat or propped out to stand upright making it a multifunctional toy for new infants and toddlers. I loved that the stand was sturdy and functional when it is propped up, even on a soft surface like a bed or a child's play mat. Unlike several other products, this mirror did not topple over when propped upright.

This mirror is incredibly versatile as the top frame consists of three textured balls that can rotate a full 360 degrees and slide to either side for the practice of fine motor skills. The schematic surface designs on each ball is unique and served us with hours of great sensory exploration!

The side frames are encompassed by soft ribbed handles and also serve as a teether. I liked that the ribbed interval spacing is just right for tiny fingers to grasp. This also makes it easy to clean for parents. I wiped it down easily with a little soap and water on a soft washcloth and left it to air dry - it was ready to use in a matter of seconds making it a win in my books.

The clear sight and shatter-resistant mirror itself is a great tool for babies to recognize faces and develop self-exploration and awareness skills. I learned that this multifunctional mirror was designed with contributions from a team of doctors and therapists making it BPA, Phthalate Free and food-grade silicone safe. All of this combined makes it a great tool for baby's self-development at playtime and creates peace of mind for mom!
