Greetings:

Right from the very start of the Fall 2016 semester at Roger Williams University, Peyton Rockcliffe impressed me: She sat in the front row.

And many other members of our Introduction to Public Speaking class were probably very glad she did. That's because Peyton proved to be a good listener who practiced empathy when members of our class needed it most – while standing up in front of everyone giving a speech. She listened and gave constructive feedback that her classmates appreciated.

Peyton always greeted me with a smile, focused her attention on the front of the room, shared her thoughts on the subject matter under discussion and asked questions.

A psychology major, Peyton also explored her own interests when choosing speech topics, which included taking a break from social media and how body language can influence our moods. She was always well prepared.

Most importantly, I considered Peyton a pleasant and poised speaker, someone I looked forward to seeing every Tuesday and Friday afternoon. I have no doubt that her future coworkers and clients will probably feel the same way.

I wish Peyton all the best in pursuing a career in social work.

Sincerely,
