Unless you've been living in a cave temple for the past year in the Central Mountains, you'll realize that we've all experienced a myriad of consequences from the Covid-19 pandemic. But one way or another, we've managed to retain our sense of community despite the detrimental effects of social distancing and the fears that the pandemic has engendered everywhere.

In adversity come humanity, kindness and connection. This gallery reminds us of the many ways that we're connected to each other: whether it's through celebrations, arts, events, rituals, and tourism. So let's celebrate our togetherness, our community spirit, and our interdependence. They are, after all, what make up our society: Taiwan.

“Coming Through” by Kenneth Dickson

In the 90's, Kenneth Dickson bought a camera to take photographs of his travels around Taiwan. Many years later he's using his umpteenth camera and needing a bigger disk drive. Some of his photographs are available at <http://www.lookthroughthelens.com>. Welcome.
