

TRUST HIS WORD, NO MATTER HOW YOU FEEL

Do you know how much you connect your feelings to whether or not God is true?

Looking back over my life, I have 'felt' God with me in the good times. As I celebrated something or achieved something, I seemed to feel Him right next to me, looking at me with pride, saying 'Yeah, she's mine'

In the past half year I have been having a hard time with something that seems to have come around again. Am I less devastated? No, it still makes me sad that I have to fight through this again.

The difference this time is that I know that my emotions are not connected to how mighty He is, how He works out this situation, or most of all whether He is with me. He is not looking around at the situation wringing His hands and wondering what He is going to do. My sadness and frustration does not make His word any less true. His word is my strong foundation. I stand on it through this time. No matter how it looks, no matter how I feel.

A lot of times I have read the bible I have sensed my feelings rising up, rejecting His word, screaming 'That's not how I feel!'

How can I believe that Jesus walked on water...but not believe that He has healed me?

How can I believe He fed the five thousand, but not believe He will meet my needs according to His riches in glory?

Or do I think the 'glory' is too far away to pay for these bills?

I trust my feelings a little too much, especially when it comes to the word of God. Not that feelings are not important, since after all He placed them inside of me to enjoy. He did not put them there to doubt whether He is true or not.

I love to go to him and tell Him 'Lord, today I feel like a soaked cat. Miserable.'

I have learnt, though, to finish that sentence with whichever scripture suits the situation best "Lord I feel like a soaked cat, but your word says that ALL things work out for those that love You, so I'm going to stand on that". I may not feel better immediately, but it sure is better than the draining, nagging thoughts that do me no help!

Trust His word, no matter how you feel.

Be blessed!
