Franciscan Peacemakers Help Victims of Human Trafficking and Abuse

Support Their Ministry NOW and Get 25% OFF

Yesterday was World Day Against Trafficking, reminding us to stand up in defense of trafficked people who are made in God's image just like us! Thankfully, there are initiatives that inform people about trafficking and what they can do to stop it.

For more than two and a half decades, the Franciscan Peacemakers have given the women abused by the industry their hospitality, housing, a recovery program, and an initiative in which survivors make and sell bath and body products for a living wage.

Thanks to the mission of Franciscan Peacemakers, victims find contentment and purpose. By supporting these women, you get access to pristine beauty products while also exemplifying the Franciscan charism of "peace and all good."

Every purchase made goes to helping the victims of exploitation who craft the wellness and hygiene products offered by Franciscan Peacemakers. Right now save an automatic 25% on these fragrant soaps and cleansers!

Another recent initiative ridiculing the trafficking industry is the movie Sound of Freedom. Currently playing in theaters, the film follows the true story of a federal agent, played by Jim Caviezel (The Passion of the Christ), going beyond his duty to save a child from traffickers. Our culture is beginning to wake up to this reality. It can't be ignored.

Like Sound of Freedom, Franciscan Peacemakers sheds light on the problem of sex trafficking and works as part of an answer. The organization offers peace to women forced into prostitution—often from trafficking. It offers them more than just an alternative. It offers them a fresh start to life!
