Dear Colleague:

The Hannaford Company,
Inc.

Enclosed is a visa application form which you need to fill out and return to Paul Boertlein along with your passport and two pictures. We need this information immediately, so please send it by federal express to The Hannaford Company, 655-15th street, N.W., Suite 200, Washington, D.C. 20005. You may use our federal express account number to send it. The number is 0200-0474-6.

While in Saudi Arabia, you will be staying at the Intercontinental Hotel, Maazar street, P.O. box 3636, Riyadh, Saudi Arabia. The phone number there is 011-966-1-465-5000.

I am including material on the culture, climate and other information which you may find useful.

A special fare has been arranged if you choose to fly on the Saudi Arabian airline. You should make your reservation with Mr. Ahmad Muhsen, manager of sales, who is aware of the arrangements. The fare has been discounted by 50%, so that the round trip fare for business class is $1,704 and for economy class it is $1,229. The phone number to call is 202/333-3800. Their office is located at 2600 Virginia avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20037

While in Saudi Arabia, the contact people for you to set up interviews or other assistance you may need will be Joe Norton from The Hannaford Company or Ted Everts, executive director of the Association of Space Explorers.

The agenda is being revised, so is not available for distribution at this time.

If you have any further questions, Joe Norton can be reached at 202/638-4600 through Friday, November 3. After that time, Paul Boertlein or Jared Cameron will be the Washington contact should you have problems or need information. They can be reached at 202/638-4600.

Sincerely,

Nancy Hart Keever
Senior Media Consultant

Cultural briefing

Following is some general information we've compiled and which you might find useful.

Weather

The weather in Riyadh during November is expected to be moderate, which means about 20-25 deg C (70-80 deg F) during the day, and about ten degrees cooler during the night. This means that a shirt during the day, or a light sweater, and a heavier sweater or a jacket during the night should be adequate. All facilities and automobiles are air-conditioned.

Food

The mainstay of the Saudi diet is rice and lamb. The food is generally mildly spiced. Nonetheless, all cuisines are usually available, from the regional specialties, such as Egyptian and Lebanese, to the international, such as the spicy Indian, ubiquitous Chinese, Continental, Italian, etc. The hotel can usually accommodate any special requests. If we know of particular dietary needs in advance, we can arrange to have that food made available for the guest.

Alcohol

No alcohol may be consumed in Saudi Arabia. No alcoholic beverages may be brought into Saudi Arabia.

Dress

The Arabic dress is distinct from Western dress. For the guests, a dark suit is appropriate for all formal occasions in Saudi Arabia, and any semi-formal wear is acceptable at other times. For the ladies, conservative modest dress is strongly urged: covered arms at least to the elbows, and legs to the ankles; they should bear in mind that during the desert outing, most will be seated on carpets on the ground.

Prayer

All activity is suspended in Saudi Arabia for prayer five times a day. Prayer usually does not last for more than five minutes. The first is at daybreak, the second at midday (approx 12:15 in Riyadh in mid November), followed by afternoon approx two hours later; then sunset and finally at dark. Prayer is brief and will not conflict with scheduled activities.

Shopping

A tour of Riyadh and old and new shopping areas is arranged for the ladies.

Medical

Medical services are available in all specialties. Internationally renowned medical facilities are within two minutes' drive from the hotel and the conference center. We request that anyone having special medical needs inform us so that we can make the necessary arrangements. A qualified house-doctor is on call at the hotel.

Recreation

The hotel's fully equipped exercise facilities, sauna, and swimming pool are at the disposal of the guest 24 hours a day.

Electricity and water

Electric power in Riyadh is 110 volts at 60 Hertz. Transformers are available at the hotel and at the conference center. Water is potable, directly from the tap, although bottled waters are available from various parts of the world.

Public behavior

There is little interaction between men and women in public. It is unacceptable to kiss in public or to hold hands; greetings between men and women are verbal, without handshaking. Photographs, particularly of women, should never be made without obtaining prior permission.

Art Exhibit

An art exhibit is scheduled to open with the Fifth Annual Congress of the Association of Space Explorers and to run concurrently with it, open to the public for two weeks, after the official opening. The exhibit will display the most prominent space art in the world, with emphasis on the theme of the Congress "Space for Earth." Some of the renowned NASA collection will be on exhibit, as well as European art arranged by the French company Aerospatiale, in addition to art from the foremost Soviet artists. More than forty Saudi artists have been invited to contribute to the show, some of whom are creating special compositions for the exhibit. The famous American artists, Robert McCall, Howard Cook, and Pamela Lee join such unique talents as the Soviet artists Andrei Sokolov and Alexei Leonov, himself a cosmonaut, to bring the finest space art in the world to Tuwaiq Palace in the Diplomatic Quarter of Riyadh, for what promises to be a unique display of human imagination.

Tuwaiq Palace

The site of the art exhibit is described in the art catalogue as follows:

One of the landmarks of Riyadh, Tuwaiq Palace occupies a prime site on the north-western side of the Diplomatic Quarter, overlooking the Hanifa valley and bracketed by two smaller branches of the valley. It covers an area of 77,000m<sup>2</sup>, designed in the form of a large wall curving around an inner garden and protecting it from the elements. This wall forms the main part of the palace which rises to four stories in some sections.

The design reflects a harmonious treatment of the site and a sensitivity to its natural appearance, in that the natural stone of Riyadh of which the wall is comprised complements the desert environment surrounding the palace, appearing to rise from it. Three white tents, in delicate balance with the colors of the wall and the surroundings, cover the main halls of the palace, thus accentuating the intimate relation of desert and tent.

The scheduling of activities at the palace allows for a variety of official, social and cultural functions, as well as hosting large exhibits of culture and art, in addition to academic conferences.

LIVE TELECONFERENCE TO COVER ASE'S 5TH PLANETARY CONGRESS

Space rescue and damage to earth's environment head the agenda for the 5th Annual Planetary Congress of the Association of Space Explorers in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, November 11-15.

A live two-way international video teleconference from 9-10:30 a.m., Tuesday, November 14, will provide science writers and reporters in the U.S. the opportunity to direct questions to a panel of astronauts and cosmonauts attending the congress in Riyadh. This teleconference will take place between Riyadh, the American Museum Hayden Planetarium in New York City, the new Ramada Renaissance at Techworld in Washington, D.C., and the Fernbank Science Center in Atlanta, Georgia.

A special presentation is scheduled for Arthur C. Clarke, author of the screenplay, 2001: A Space Odyssey.

The teleconference will be offered live to all domestic stations. Those wishing to attend one of the three locations should contact Nancy Keever or Chris Casey at 202/638-4600.

LIVE TELECONFERENCE TO COVER ASE'S 5TH PLANETARY CONGRESS

Space rescue and damage to earth's environment head the agenda for the 5th Annual Planetary Congress of the Association of Space Explorers in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, November 11-15.

A live two-way international video teleconference from 8:45-10:15 a.m., Tuesday, November 14, will provide science writers and reporters in the U.S. the opportunity to direct questions to a panel of astronauts and cosmonauts attending the congress in Riyadh. This teleconference will take place between Riyadh, the American Museum Hayden Planetarium in New York City, the new Ramada Renaissance at Techworld in Washington, D.C., and the Fernbank Science Center in Atlanta, Georgia, and will be offered live to all domestic stations on Westar Five/2X transponder. In addition to reporters in Atlanta, science students from the 9th & 12th grades at the Fernbank school will also participate.

The ASE Congress was established to provide an annual forum where those from different countries who have flown in space can exchange ideas and share their unique experiences. The present membership consists of 72 men and women from 17 of the 20 nations which have participated in space flight programs.

Arthur C. Clarke, author of the screenplay, 2001: A Space Odyssey, is being honored with a special award for his contributions in the area of science. He developed the basic theory of communication satellites, which was published in 1945. Dr. Yash Pal of India has been selected as this year's recipient of ASE's Annual Planetary Award for his work designing a satellite information network to serve rural villages in India.

Those wishing to attend in Atlanta should contact Alan Minton at 404/220-2910. A continental breakfast will be served at Fernbank from 8:00 to 8:30 a.m..

Mr. Pat Murphy
5738 East Horseshoe Road
Paradise Valley
Arizona 85253

Dear Mr. Murphy:

Enclosed is information on the Association of Space Explorers and its 5th Annual Planetary Congress which I thought might be helpful. I have also included a list of attendees and some of the "firsts" of members.

The live international two-way video teleconference will take place from 9-10:30 a.m. EST at the American Museum Hayden Planetarium in New York City, the Ramada Renaissance at Tech World in Washington, D.C. and the Fernbank Science Center in Atlanta on Tuesday, November 14. Science writers and reporters will be invited to attend this teleconference and ask questions of astronauts and cosmonauts attending.

Arthur C. Clarke and Dr. Yash Pal of India will also be at the conference in Riyadh.

If I can be of further assistance, please call me at 202/638-4600. Also, if any of the contacts you are making ask you to do a story for them, could you let me know so that we will be able to tell the Saudis where there might be coverage.

Thank you for all your help.

Sincerely,

Nancy Hart Keever
Senior Media Consultant

attention to the fact that for example when they first flew, they saw virtually no oil slicks on the ocean and relatively few fires around the planet. Whereas, when they flew several years later, they were impressed to see many oil slicks and a tremendous number of fires throughout the tropical regions of the planet. This is an experience that we would have flown in space see with our own eyes and feel as human beings and it is very important that we begin to assume greater responsibility for human behavior here on our planet. So every resource should be placed to this critical issue in order to insure that we have a habitable and beautiful Earth for generations of children yet unborn.

Prince Sultan: Next question from Riyadh. Go ahead, please.

Speaker: _____ from Egypt. The questions is to cosmonaut Schweickart and cosmonaut Leonov and Sir Clarke. It is the lightest side of picture may be the funniest. We didn't have any convincing interpretation of what happened recently in the Soviet Union with some apparition and may be unidentified flying objects. Is it the first time or was there any precedent in the beginning of this century? In some books, they say big spaceship came to Earth and before arriving at Earth it was completely annihilated and there was devastation for the fields and the forests. This is one part of the question. Another part, again, we heard that some cosmonauts said that they saw something, an apparition in their ships or following their ships. How rare is this scientifically interpretation object objective? Thank you very much.

Prince Sultan: I might add that Mr. Masueur is a renown writer in the area and a science fiction writer and I wouldn't rule out that he is using this opportunity to promote his books, maybe. But I would like to direct the question first and put Rusty on the hot seat so he can start on it.

Schweickart: Well, I quite frankly have nothing whatsoever to say on the question. I certainly read the accounts that came out of the Soviet Union recently, but I have no knowledge whatsoever on the subject. I defer to my colleague, Aleksei Leonov.

Leonov: Thank you, Rusty. This year is the 30th anniversary since I have been a Soviet Cosmonaut and during those 30 years neither I nor any of my colleagues have seen any of these UFO's. Recently, what happened in our country, some town, some part, some children ran across some object. However, as much as I have tried to find out exactly what happened there, I haven't had much success and it seems to me that this was something totally invented and has to do with the children's imagination. We, I won't conceal the fact that there have been some rather funny events occurring and which were out of context interpreted as involving some sort of beings or objects outside. But that these were ever photographed or designs or drawings made of them, that I don't know anything about. I don't think it's ever happened.

Clarke:

You want me to give my views--every five years a writer is called the last word on flying saucers. And to sum it up, if you've seen as many as I have, you won't believe in them. I have seen about six and they were superb and in some cases it took me a long time to find out what they were. Everyone had a natural explanation. There are no visitors from space. There may be visitors from space in the past and we should look for evidence of this. And this is why I am very annoyed with the flying saucer maniacs because they prevent serious scientists from looking into important subjects. All these stories are hoaxes, misinterpretations, jokes and there is not an atom of truth in any of them. If there was really a spaceship visiting Earth, even if it was a stealth spaceship, the optical astrologers would spot it. We would know within about 15 minutes. The idea that for decades secrets like this were concealed is utterly nonsense. A secret like this would be kept by the scientific community for about as long as it would take to send one fax.

Prince Sultan:

Well, I suppose to some extent we all agree that being non-believers on this issue until we see evidence, you have to settle for the people attending this conference.

Next question will be from New York. Go ahead, please.

Speaker:

My name is Russell Gims and I am with Contact Magazine and I have a question for Prince Sultan. About 10 years ago, astronaut Buzz Aldrin told the press that the most beautiful sight in the universe was a waste dump and it emptied out into space and hardened. Now that more people have seen outer space and been in orbit, I would like to know if you would like to update that or had a differing opinion on the subject?

Prince Sultan:

With Buzz being a good friend and attendee of this conference, I would like to leave the comments on this issue to himself and later opportunity with you, but on my side, I have much more opportunity to concentrate on the beautiful side--looking at Earth from space and seeing some of the unusual sights that attracted my attention. Particulary how small Earth gets as you go around it everyday and on and on. The smallness is really mental and it is not physical in fact. That's because you begin to realize the places you always thought were too far from each other were just way out in the middle of nowhere like you say in the States. But actually they are all close and in front of your own eyes at one glance, I could see Riyadh and I could see all place where I now understand when we talk about problems in the North Pole and in the South Pole and in Africa, we are actually talking about problems that concern all of us and not just people in that place. So there are many, many beautiful sights from space, but I guess reciting them for you today would be a waste of time for all of my colleagues. So therefore I appreciate it if you would look up in you library and buy our new book The Home Planet and it would give you an idea of what we are talking about.

Next question will be from Washington, D.C.

Speaker:

Your Highness, this is Bob Burt of the Journal of Commerce and Flight International . My questions is directly particulary at Arthur Clarke but at anyone else who would answer it. Could you comment on the future of the exploitation or perhaps the commercialization of space? I know Mr. Clarke personally invented the communications satellite, but I would like his comments on recent developments such as the Japanese proposal to send into space the ashes of cremated loved ones.

Clarke:

Well, I believe that was an American proposal and not a Japanese one. But I am against anything being deposited in space which is not vital. There is too much garbage, too much debris there already. The various radio networks are tracking about 6,000 objects and one of these little space coffins even though they are supposed to be no bigger than this, that could wipe out a spacecraft sometime and the fact is that such an accident would be inevitable. And no, I can see the point of view of the people of wanting to look up and see their loved ones orbiting overhead, but I am afraid that is not a good idea. There are many other forms of space commercialization which are far more viable.

Prince Sultan: Would anyone like to comment? I would like to call on Dr. Merbold to see what he has on this subject.

Merbold: I am sure space commercializing would come, but I would like to draw attention to another universal aspect of space. And that is, if anything has to be done for this planet, observing its pollution or what is happening to its heart and lung, and then something to eliminate those things which make it happen, I think we have to develop a concept of what I would like to call in short Earth citizenship or Earthnality, that is, Earth's nationality. What this implies is that ultimately in order to save the planet, we will have to think in terms of some kind of global Earth public sector. Services which are the rights of all human beings on this planet and of the planet itself.

Prince Sultan: Thank you. The next question will be from Atlanta.

Speaker: I'm Robbie Keefer a student here and I am addressing this question to Georgi Ivanov of Bulgaria. I am wondering are there any unique problems in overcoming the language barrier in space?

Ivanov: (Communication problem)

Prince Sultan: I'm sorry, would you please repeat the question again.

Speaker: I was wondering if there are any unique problems in overcoming the language barrier in space?

Ivanov: (Communication problem)

Prince Sultan: Inaudible.

Ivanov: Space, like our association of space explorers, unifies people. Our association in fact did have some language barriers in it. We all come from different countries, but we are brought together by the fact that we have all flown in space. And just as you can see in front of you, through space we have the opportunity to join together a whole series of cities and from different points on the Earth's surface. So in the future, space, I am sure, will continue to unify us and as Professor Yash Pal has said, we as citizens of one planet, our own native Earth, must come together in this way.

Prince Sultan: We go back to Riyadh right now for a question. Please go ahead.

Speaker: This is Mrs. _____ from National Herald, New Delhi. My questions will be addressed to Prince Sultan and partly to Professor Pal. How would you use space technology for a better life on Earth when the majority of the countries can't even afford basic modern technology? Moreover, the finances involved are enormous. How can developing countries benefit from the research and studies done on space? Has some thought been given to it?

Prince Sultan: With all respect, I would like to have Dr. Pal answer the question first.

Pal: If space technology is of any use at all, then I think developing countries need it more than anybody else and I think space technology is very powerful in regard to bridging distances and in going to places that are very hard to get and I think developing countries need to do that. Also, in regard to the resources and in regard to cartography and in regard to geological surveys, forest surveys, all these aspects are very difficult to do any other way. People used to fly airplanes. It was very expensive. In fact, many things that you want to do can be done much more cheaply and, in fact, sometimes there are many aspects of space technology that has come too late for industrialized countries and they have already wasted a lot of money. Developing countries can actually go ahead and use it faster.

Prince Sultan: Well, in fact, also another fact really, that is one of the reasons Dr. Pal is being awarded the annual award for one of these for the association this year is because of the work he did in India in employing space technology in serving 5,000 villages in India through satellite communications through other methods. And that is the theme of our Congress today. When we say Space for Earth, Earth does not mean for us rocks and water. It means humans, creatures and the rocks. So where-- in our statement as you might have noticed, we also called for technology to serve particularly the developing nations. We think--my personal opinion--there is of course a lot of money spent unjustifiably on space programs and so what--but also as I said to you yesterday, that there might have also been some money spent unjustifiably on human aid programs. So it does not rule out that human aid is all wrong and so it does not rule out that space is all wrong. Next question would be from New York again. One more round of questions.

Speaker:

Frank Bernucia, the Space Press. I direct my question to Ulf Merbold. Recent events in Europe, Germany in particular, have been very dramatic indeed. What role will space exploration and exploitation have in further unifying Europe, the ESA in particular and what role should the United States and the Soviet Union have in assisting Europe's future space exploration?

Merbold:

I'd like to answer the second half of your question first. From an European point of view, the leading countries in space exploration are undoubtedly are of course the U. S. and also the Soviet Union. From an European point of view, I think it would be extremely desirable to cooperate with both partners in order to benefit from their knowledge, their know-how and from everything they have already achieved and accomplished.

As far as the first part of your question is concerned, I feel ESA and I am employed by the European Space Agency, is a very good example that Europe is on its way to unify the different countries and cultures. I feel that space is perhaps a field where unification is a little easier than in other areas simply because there is no tradition. ESA as the European Space Agency has successfully developed and built a whole series of scientific satellites, high energy telescopes in space, but also have communication satellites and metallurgical satellites--that kind of thing. They have successfully developed space lift the ---- series and so on and European countries in this area cooperate very effectively and successfully and to include one other side effect, the young girl asked the question about language problems. There are all kinds of languages in Europe as you know, but in ESA we use one language and that is called BE. Broken English and it works out real great.

Leonov:

In the USSR today, we are conducting another of joint Soviet/European programs between the USSR, Austria, France and possible the Federal Republic of Germany and in fact there is one just starting. So you can't have cooperation without understanding and without understanding you cannot have better relations. First of all we have these programs with unmanned flight and now we are getting into manned programs. We are finding a common language in order to solve these complex technical problems. Thank you.

Schweickart:

I was going to say as Aleksei pointed out, there have been many internationally cooperative flights. I would like to pick that up and go back to the question that was asked. I think all of us are very excited about the events that are going out through out the world but especially at the moment in the European area and I think it would just be delightful if our program would pick out two colleges here ----- and -----of Germany and put them together in a space shuttle. I think it would be terrific. Are you for that?

Merbold:

Yes, I'm for that.

Prince Sultan:

Next question, I suppose is from Washington, D.C. Please go ahead.

Speaker:

I am Barbara Springman from Space Data Resource Information. My question is for Aleksei Leonov or anyone else who would like to comment. In the United States, we have a real crisis in education. High dropout rates from high school, even graduates who are not prepared for careers or jobs. If you could comment on what you see happening in you country that is helping your students in ways that we can use space exploration to inspire and motivate students of all ages.

Leonov:

Thank you. In the USSR, now we have set up a program of so-called young astronauts or young cosmonauts. It is not just a club but is a system of physical training which has been thought through very carefully as well as a system of scientific training. Furthermore, over and above what they get in school. Now we have a rather large number of these young cosmonauts in the USSR--a couple hundred thousand--who are young people and who are very happy to join this program. I know in the United States of America last year at least there were about 800,000 of these young astronauts who were also following this supplementary program. We are able to carry through this program to the end and have a million young people in each country who have the necessary education in these fundamental areas of science. I think we will be able to consider that we have done something very useful. Now other than informational programs and in transmissions or broadcasts about what we have done in our flights and bringing information to other parts of the world where they did not have communication facilities up until now. These are all things which should be done, but there are many other things as well.

Prince Sultan: We will take another question from Riyadh. Please go ahead.

Speaker: My name is Nasser _____ from _____ for Science and Technology. My question is directed to Mr. Arthur Clarke. What is the effect of direct broadcast via satellite on nations that have diverse cultural and religious backgrounds with what is broadcast by technically advanced nations. And do you consider this to be one of the disadvantages of space technology?

Clarke: This is a very sensitive question in this area because I know that there are some authorities and with very good reason do not like some of the material produced from other countries. When I am in America and England and when I look at some of the television programs we see there, I say I wish I could ban them, though, in principle, I am against any form of censorship. In the long run, in fact, any form of censorship is impossible. We have already seen all over the whole world the impact of direct satellite and more also perhaps video cassettes. We can only try to educate people to a level where they do not want to receive this sort of thing which we would all object to.

Prince Sultan: I think we have a follow up also from Merbold.

Merbold: I would like to add that the availability of satellite networks from my point of view has had already a tremendous impact on the political scene on this world. Because in our days, nothing can happen on the globe without being witnessed by millions of other people. I feel that is a tremendous pressure on dignitary systems and I think it has already changed many things.

Prince Sultan: Now, we'll take another question from Atlanta, if we can please.

Speaker: I am _____ from Arab News and _____ newspapers. My question is to Rusty Schweickart and Aleksei Leonov. Don't you as an organization believe that the militarization of space programs both East and West has damaged the purely scientific space missions and if you do, why doesn't the ASE lobby governments to keep space demilitarized.

Schweickart: This is an excellent question and one which we have discussed many times as individuals with concern for the future of the world. Clearly, first of all, let me say that I am not actually aware of any current damage that has occurred as to any civil space activity as a result of military space activity. Nevertheless, the potential in terms of life on Earth is very large indeed. And, I think all of us would very much like to see the perceived necessity for military activity in space to diminish perhaps even to zero if that were possible. That will take a great deal of understanding between not only nations, but people. And one of the things which our organization supports very strongly is increased understanding between people working together as we as an organization have come together because when all is said and done we are all members of one family. At the same time, I would say that there are many aspects of military and satellites in space which provide very necessary information today. The so-called technical means for monitoring and policing if you will agreements between nations to maintain order and peace. So this is not a straightforward, simple question. Nevertheless, I think all of us would like to see fear and distrust which lies at the root of much of military expenditure to be diminished through increased international understanding.

Prince Sultan: Thank you. A comment on the question?

Leonov: As a representative of the Association from the Soviet side and a representative of the Soviet people, have rather clear-cut positions on this point. We fully reject militarization of space in our country and our government has made a number of proposals on these lines. But the question is then asked, how you would monitor this if a person disarms or not. In order to know, you have to have a space system which could continuously monitor all parts of the Soviet Union. A very wise answer. But then we are asked, show me some spot on the arc of the Soviet Union and we will send any international expert group there to that spot which could then take a look at what is going on there. Whether it is militarized or not. So, in this way, out of inertia or out of some old tradition, as Rusty just said, because we really don't quite believe or trust on another, yet this question keeps being raised. We are talking rather about questions of rescue, ecology, flight to Mars, but our audience tells us that this is all very expensive. But how cheap is it in comparison to what is spent on war armaments today. ?If you calculate the expenditures which are planned, for the space plan initiative, SDI, excuse me for mentioning it, I would say that the program which we are proposing here for a manned flight to Mars is a tiny fraction of what is being expended or what is planned to be expended on space-based weapons I recently heard at a Congress in the United States. The Congress of the United States has sharply cut back on SDI financing. This is a very correct step and I am sure if such steps continue to be taken in the future, then we will get very close to the situation in which no body will be concerned about these threats hanging over their country from space. Thank you.

Prince Sultan:

This opinion does not necessarily represent the opinion of the whole association itself although most of us would hold the same thoughts. Please don't take that as a statement representative of the whole association. That is and that was a very complicated subject in discussions of this organization and I would like to keep pursuing that discussion rather than coming up with clear-cut statements on that right now. We'll go to our next question if we have anybody ready in the cities. Otherwise we will go to Riyadh. What do we have?

Speaker:

Yes, this is Dave Barrett from ABC news once again...could you please state the name of the person: Astronaut Schweickart or Merbold please.

We had a problem with the transmission and we missed the very first part of your question. I think you asked. Well, go ahead with the first part of your question again. I would like to know what discipline as astronauts you would have to work on because a mission to Mars is going to take a very long time. You're going to have to coexist with cosmonauts, astronauts on that journey. I just want to know what kind of space preparations, you as space travellers would make.

Schweickart: We think we have the gist of the question, it did come in and out again. You're right. I think a mission to Mars would take a very long time and I am sure that the astronauts and or cosmonauts would want to have a number of things to occupy their time. One of the best things that I would like to take along would be some of Arthur Clarke's books. I've missed a few along the way. But certainly it makes sense in addition to the maintenance of the space craft, I think that there will be scientific research that will occupy the time crews on the way to Mars or any other long duration missions. And I would hope that those are not simply time filling activities but are in fact meaningful scientific research and I'm sure that the scientific community in the world will come up with more than enough to fill the time of the crews on the way. Ulf...

Merbold: From the technical point of view, I think a flight to Mars is a challenge far beyond a flight to the moon and that is because you have to provide the infrastructure such that you can cope and deal with medical problems, technical problems, you have to do maintenance you have to be prepared to protect the astronauts in case of the solar flare because you can not quickly go home as you can from a low orbit. There are a tremendous amount of problems to be solved. But more important than all, I think, is whether the human being can spend two and a half years in a tin can and go to Mars. and I feel to help the humans to maintain motivation and survive such a flight in a healthy mental status. It would be best to give them interesting work to do. That is at best what I would like to do. I think our Soviet colleagues can give more details on these kinds of problems than we can. Our colleague Dieterorf flew more than a year. And I think he is perhaps the best qualified man to make some comments on these sorts of problems.

Speaker: Is Velodia here in the room. I don't see him. So let me say something for him.

Speaker: We have a man who flew 366 days and some hours that was Velodia Tetornivan...this is a lot longer than it would take to go to Mars in one direction. You have to go there, stay there, and then come back again and that takes a very long time. It is pretty clear that this whole flight would involve a great deal of scientific work continual observation of the Earth from different distances various observations. There are a lot of interesting things that can be done in such a flight. Prior to that the question was asked how long it takes to adapt to lengthy flights. We have a man or two men who flew 366 days. And it depends on the person's mood and how he feels about it. If he wants to fly for six months, you have to give him a couple of weeks training. If you are going to Mars, he has to train for about a month under those exact conditions. A Russian saying says that the road seems shorter if you are travelling with good people. The main thing is to get together a good group of people--good companions--then it will seem shorter. Here in our association we have the largest number of cosmonauts and here in Riyadh we have the largest number of astronauts and cosmonauts together in one place. I can say that I would be willing with anyone of them to fly to Mars. They all are extremely interested, highly skilled, well trained and lively colleagues.

SPEAKER:

I would like to call the questioners attention to a recent book the home planet. I was fascinated when I read some of the comments of my soviet colleagues who conducted some experiments in growing plants in space. This is obviously an interesting biological experiment to grow plants and food products perhaps, what I think the human aspect of it was the most interesting to me when one of the Soviet Cosmonauts would often go to sleep next to the plants because he felt better being near little green things. I think that is a very, very important reality. So I think that I would add a few plants to the long trip to Mars.

Prince Sultan:

We will go to our last question from Riyadh. Please.

Speaker:

My name is Adrian Barry. I am the science correspondent of the Daily Telegraph of London and my question is for the Royal Highness. Many nations are taking part in the planning and participating in the construction of the international freedom space station. I was just wondering if your Royal Highness thought there was any possibility that Saudi Arabia might join in?

Prince Sultan:

Well of course I participate in the Association of Space explorers in my capacity as an colleague/astronaut rather than my capacity as a member of a certain organization or another in Saudi Arabia. Having said that, as a member of the Association of Space explorers, as an astronaut who also wishes to continue in that direction, I would also like to very much see our country participate in one degree or another in an international program of that scale. We have proven that we can be active participants in a full sense of different highly technologically demanding programs. And this would be I think in my mind a fantastic opportunity to participate within our capacity and means and also fitting in with our aspirations and so I join my voice to yours and maybe one day that would happen.

At the end of course I would like to thank you all for being with us today and taking your time. Please read our statements as carefully if you ever get them soon, as carefully as you would like or as usefully as you would like. But I think they translate not the aspirations and hopes for us, the members of this associations. We don't represent a group and we don't represent a color or a philosophy. We actually represent all of you. We are all humans who have seen Earth from a different perspective. Because of that perspective, and the difficulty of putting that perspective into words by myself a simple fighter pilot. I would like to call upon a man who has touched us in this Congress and has honored us with his presence, Mr. Arthur C. Clarke to put a cap on this conference.

Mr. Clarke:

Thank you Prince Sultan. I 'm delighted to have this opportunity to say a few words which may encapsulate some of the points that we made. First of all, applications satellites are the immediate dividend from space. They have been touched once or twice already when people ask why should you spend money on space. And I would like to give a single example due to my friend, Dr. Yash Pal. In 1977, a great cyclone hit the Indian subcontinent and about 10,000 people were killed. Last month, a very similar cyclone hit the subcontinent. 25 people were killed on land. The difference was entirely due to satellites. Meteorological satellites which tracked the cyclone communications outlets passed the information on. So here is a rather paradoxical thought I would like to give to you: If, heaven forbid, you had to choose between spending money on building a hospital or building a satellite, it might be better to build a satellite. It might save more lives. So think about that. Now I want to broaden our horizons a bit and just say a few words about the subject which after all is the most exciting one, in which we are all linked together in, IS manned space flight. What is it going to lead to eventually? Well it so happens that I have a very good paper here by my old friend Dr. Thomas Paine who ran the Apollo program. And so he knows what it is all about. He recently delivered a paper called the next forty years in space at a space conference only a few weeks ago. I want to read a few remarks from Tom Paine's paper.

I believe that our response to the challenge of space will determine the destiny of mankind. Confined to Earth, our descendants are confined to a zero-sum struggle for dwindling resources. This evolutionary dead end need not be our fate. We can open an unlimited future for humanity through a promethean endeavor to extend life beyond Earth.

And then Tom lists the five things we have to do to make this possible:

First of all we have to construct a highway to space, reliable, low cost space transportation for passengers and cargo. We know in principle how to do that. We've got to build space craft we don't throw away after one mission but can use over and over again. Then we have to establish orbiting space ports around the Earth, the moon and Mars to supply, maintain, service space craft. Then we have to construct a bridge between the worlds which are spaceships or if you would like mobile space stations in continuous orbit between Earth and moon and Earth and Mars. And Tom make a very interesting point about these: cycling space ships on the Mars run would be more like the Queen Elizabeth II than the Boeing 747. Well I know a lot of people here would like to go to Mars on a Boeing 747. But the idea of going the QEII is even better. Then we have to develop prospecting and resources to find out what is on these planets--what is there--so we know what to use. You know not so long ago this was lots of sand. Nobody know what lay beneath the sand. We don't know yet what lies between the sands of Mars. But I am sure that there is a lot there worth going for. Then we've got to develop closed-ecology biosystems. Closed systems which can feed and maintain peoples for indefinite periods in the way that planet Earth has done for quite a long time and which hopefully, with our cooperation, will continue to do. Finally let me read again from Tom Paine, a sentence in which, I think, sums up what this is all about.

Whether we become a multi-planet species with unlimited horizons or are forever confined to Earth will be decided in the 21st century amid the vast plains, rugged canyons and lofty mountains of Mars.

Thank you.

Prince Sultan:

I thank you again and goodbye from Riyadh, the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia.

EAST MEETS WEST

Dr. Khalid Abdul Ghany, mayor of Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, is given a personal tour of the historic Stockyards of Fort Worth by city councilman Steve Murrin, also known as the unofficial mayor of the Stockyards because of his involvement with and promotion of this area.

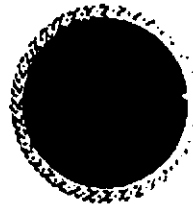

Mayor Abdul Ghany, who has played a key role in preserving and restoring significant architecture in the older part of Jeddah, was very interested in learning about the restoration efforts in the Stockyards area.

The tour included a visit to Leddy's, where they watched craftsmen make leather saddles, and to the famous Stockyards Hotel, where they were given a taste of Texas hospitality and served hot cider.

As part of the sharing of cultures, an invitation was extended to Steve Murrin by the Saudi officials to bring a busload of cowboys to Dallas to tour the exhibition, "Saudi Arabia Yesterday and Today," at the Dallas Convention Center. The cowboys will arrive Monday, December 18, at 7 p.m. to see the folkloric dancers, watch Saudi craftsmen at work in the "souk" and visit the exhibition.

TEXAS COUNTRY MUSICIANS ENJOY NATIVE SAUDI DANCERS

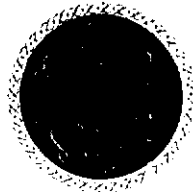

In a sharing of cultures, the Brooks Brothers, contemporary country recording artists based in Dallas, visited the cultural exhibition, Saudi Arabia Yesterday and Today, at the Dallas Convention Center where it is appearing through December 23.

Seated with their manager, Jayne Lybrand, they are captivated by a lively performance of sword-wielding folkloric dancers who appear in the "souk" or marketplace daily at 11 a.m., 1, 4 and 7 p.m.

In return, Bill and Randy Brooks invited a delegation of Saudi officials to visit the Summit Hotel where they heard original songs written by Randy Brooks and enjoyed a meal of Texas-style chili.

ZAMBELLI FIREWORKS TO BRIGHTEN DALLAS SKIES DECEMBER 8

A burst of brilliant color will light up the Dallas sky over the convention center at 9 p.m. Friday, December 8, as a fantastic fireworks display is put on to herald the opening of the cultural exhibition, "Saudi Arabia Yesterday and Today." The exhibition officially opens to the public at 10 a.m. Saturday, December 9.

This fabulous half-hour show is the creation of the Zambelli family, which has earned the reputation as the "first family of fireworks," based on the technological magic developed by Zambelli Internationale.

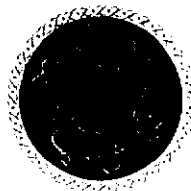

Against the backdrop of the night sky will be such unusual formations as a golden palm tree and crossettes shaped into glittering swords which form the national symbol of Saudi Arabia for the Grand Finale. Viewing a Zambelli production with its glorious colors and shapes is truly an emotional experience which brings "oohs" and "aahhs" from those fortunate enough to see one.

MORE-MORE

Through the years, the Zambellis have experimented with new colors and more flamboyant ways to present them. Their artistry has been viewed around the world, including a world's fair, super bowl games, political conventions, and the famous Fourth of July display over the Washington monument in the nation's capitol.

This spectacular show will take place at the north face of the Dallas convention center starting at approximately 9 p.m., and will last 30 minutes.

SAUDI ARABIA YESTERDAY AND TODAY TO OPEN IN DALLAS DECEMBER 9

"Saudi Arabia Yesterday and Today," a cultural exhibition encompassing over 100,000 square feet, opens at the Dallas Convention Center Saturday, December 9.

Designed to increase understanding of Saudi Arabia, its history, culture and dramatic economic progress, the exhibit is visually exciting with folkloric dancers, Bedouin tents, a "souk" or marketplace with native craftsmen at work, enormous models of the holy cities and much more. Visitors can walk through a variety of landscapes, from mountains to deserts, to the city streets of Jeddah.

A spectacular laser show combining multi-media projections and atmospheric lasers provides a unique view of Saudi Arabia, its people, and its extraordinary progress over the last few decades.

MORE-MORE

The famous Zambelli fireworks will light up the skies over Dallas at 9 p.m. Friday, December 8, following an invitation-only opening reception where Mrs. Barbara Bush will be the guest of honor at the official ribbon-cutting ceremony. Mayor Strauss of Dallas will be on hand to say "howdy, Saudi" to HRH Prince Bandar bin Sultan, ambassador from the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia to the United States, and other dignitaries attending the reception.

"Saudi Arabia Yesterday and Today" will be open daily from 10 a.m. - 9 p.m., December 9 - 23. Admission is free.

After leaving Dallas, the exhibition will be at the New York Exposition center, April 7-20, 1990 and at the Los Angeles Convention Center, June 15-30, 1990.

ASSOCIATION OF SPACE EXPLORERS

5th Planetary Congress

November 11-15, 1989

Riyadh, Kingdom of Saudi Arabia

Statement on Universal Space Rescue by the Association of Space Explorers

at the Fifth Planetary Congress
14 November, 1989, Riyadh, Saudi Arabia

Background

The Association of Space Explorers has conducted a review of the present status of crew rescue capabilities, the significance and importance of future improvements in universal space rescue, and the technical and procedural challenges of achieving such a capability. The following observations were made:

1. The UN Outer Space Treaty and Astronaut Rescue Treaty state that astronauts are envoys of mankind, and nations that are in a position to do so are obligated to render them all possible assistance in the event of distress. In addition, astronauts of one nation are obligated to render all possible assistance to astronauts of another nation in carrying out activities in space.
2. The frequency and numbers of people travelling in space has increased dramatically in the last three decades. Consequently the likelihood of emergency situations requiring a rescue effort has also increased.
3. One nation alone may not always be able to give the needed assistance to its astronauts in distress. A universal space rescue capability would unify the efforts of all space faring nations and provide a more comprehensive rescue system.
4. Implementing a universal space rescue capability is a substantial challenge to the space faring nations. But, if an effort is made to resolve technical and procedural questions together, such a capability may be established through joint enterprises, in the interest of everyone on the planet.
5. Space rescue has been a topic of concern within the Committee on Safety and Rescue of the International Academy of Astronautics for the past two decades. The Association of Space Explorers is committed to work in concert with the Committee in the future to further the objectives of space rescue. The Association is also eager to offer its expertise to all nations and space agencies to advance the international dialogue on space rescue.

Introduction:

Tape

Prince Sultan:

Good Evening. Welcome from the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia where we are the hosts of the Fifth Planetary Congress of the Association of Space Explorers. We are very honored and pleased to have you and members of the media here with us in Riyadh. In addition to that, we will be taking questions from various other places via satellite. From New York, from American Museum at Hayden Planetarium, from Washington D.C. at the Techworld Center, and from Atlanta joining the Journalists will be a group of schoolchildren at Fernbank Science Center. Our distinguished panel of guests range from astronauts to cosmonauts and two noted scientists. From the left as you see them: Dr. Yash Pal of India who designed satellite information to serve rural villages in India to improve the educational standards in his country. Dr. Pal is recognized authority on the implementation of space technology for the advancement of nations at any level of development, whether advanced or emerging and we have appreciated his wisdom and counsel at this Congress by awarding him our annual award for this year. Next to him will be my friend, fellow astronaut Ulf Merbold from West Germany. And Rusty Schweickart, American Apollo 9 astronaut and a founding member of the Association and also the American President for the Chapter in the U.S.A. Next to me on my left is Aleksei Leonov of the Soviet Union--a veteran of the joint American-Apollo Soyuz link-up in space. And next to Aleksei is Georgi Ivanov from Bulgaria. Next will be our friend, Arthur C. Clarke scientist and novelist of A 2001 Space Odyssey. The main topic of our discussion here in Riyadh's Congress, and the theme of our Congress was "Space for Earth." We have also discussed the issue of space rescue as it pertains to astronauts and space flight.

Pictures from space has said more than a billion descriptive words. We think the following video tape will present the issues of the problems most graphically.

Video

Prince Sultan:

As I mentioned, the Association of Space Explorers has dealt with the issue of manned space rescue in space for almost a year now. And I would like to ask my colleague, cosmonaut Aleksei Leonov to read the statement of the Congress on this issue. I will read the Russian version.

Leonov: Reads statement in Russian--No translation

Prince Sultan: Thank you, Aleksei. As you know, as I have mentioned earlier, the main topic and theme of this Congress is for Earth. We have also arrived at the conclusion about a minute and a half ago, before we came in here, in fact on this particular issue and some recommendations on this issue, and I would like to ask my friend, Astronaut Rusty Schweickart, to read them off to you.

Schweickart: Thank you, Sultan. The Association of Space Explorers has adopted and approved the following conclusory statement on our theme this year of space for Earth. From the first orbital flights 28 years ago that enabled humankind to enlarge its vision of the universe and to venture beyond the confinement of Earth in search of new frontiers, people have begun to master the hostility of space and to apply human ingenuity to the vast opportunity that space offers. But the opportunities of space are meaningless if humankind ignores the opportunities for enriching life on Earth. For the first time, people can stand at a distance in space and monitor the conditions of our home planet. We, the members of the Association of Space Explorers, representing virtually all nations whose sons and daughters have paved new pathways into the universe have seen from a far the dangers that can imperil our planet and thus poison the quality of life that will be inherited by generations yet unborn. Therefore, the Fifth Planetary Congress of the Association of Space Explorers, assembled in the capital city of Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, support and recommend to all nations concerned with the well-being of Earth the following.

1. Nations should design and use international environmental Earth-monitoring stations, both manned and unmanned, to act as perpetual early-warning stations of dangers that can rob the home planet of livable environments.
2. Greater efforts must be made to capitalize on the unique properties of space to expand the wonders of global communications that ultimately bring nations and peoples closer and thus eliminate isolation and understanding. Furthermore, the special advantages of space offer untold new opportunities to create capabilities improving mankind's life on Earth.

3. International cooperation and opportunities for participation in use of space for human benefit be substantially expanded. We further believe that the planning for such cooperative programs be done in consultation with and take into account the needs of developing nations.

Prince Sultan: Thank you very much Rusty. We would like to announce that we are taking questions. We begin with Riyadh and please identify yourself and to whom your question is directed.

Speaker: Salem Majetti, from Saudi Arabian Television, Channel 2. Since the space programs, we have witnessed the East Block Countries having their own space programs; and the West, their own. We just witness the joint US/USSR hookup of the Soyuz 13 and Skylab 4. With Secretary General Gorbachev's Glasnost policies, do you think there will be joint missions in outer space and sharing of results?

Prince Sultan: Please repeat the question.

Speaker: Salem Majetti, from Saudi Arabian Television, Channel 2. Since the space programs, we have had the East Bloc countries having their own space programs and the West, their own. Since 1973 with Skylab 4 and Soyuz 13 hookup we have not witnessed any joint missions and with Secretary General Gorbachev's Glasnost policy do you think there will be future joint missions and the sharing of results of experiments?

Dr. Leonov: No translation available.

Prince Sultan: Thank you very much Aleksei.

The next question will come from New York and I will have to ask the press and our panel to make their questions and answers as brief enough to satisfy the question and answers to allow more time for more questions and answers. Please go ahead New York.

Speaker: This is Dave Barrett with ABC News for Astronaut Schweickart and Cosmonaut Leonov. What is the feasibility of using the Mir space station for a long-duration U.S. Joint Mission to perhaps see what it would be like to work together for maybe a mission to Mars.

Prince Sultan: This is a question for Rusty and Aleksei: So Rusty do you want to go ahead.

Schweickart: Yes. Thank you very much for the question. Certainly the Mir Space Craft has the capability to handle cooperative or international crews and has, in fact, been doing so for some time now. The question in fact requires, for a satisfactory answer, a political decision that U.S. and Soviet mixed crews should conduct a long-duration flight on the Mir station. Again, our association years ago adopted a resolution at the conclusion of our Mexico City Congress recommending this very thing-- that we look at cooperative missions between U.S. and Soviet programs up to and including sharing of crews on these flights. So yes, I believe that certainly this is feasible. Once again our association supports it. Again, it will require an initiative of the national space programs.

Prince Sultan: Aleksei

Leonov: Translation not available

Prince Sultan: Thank you Aleksei. We go next to Atlanta. We will actually be going round and round like that until we come to the end of the conference. I'm sorry. My mistake. We will go next to Washington D.C. I guess that comes a little bit further East in the United States.

Speaker: Yes. My name is Jim Graham with Aerospace Daily. Expanding on the theme of space rescue, I have a question for Mr. Schweickart and Mr. Leonov in three parts. Do you think a system like that would cost? How soon would you like to have it ready, and thirdly, how would you overcome the political hurdles involved with state-to-state negotiations and also technology transfer?

Prince Sultan: Rusty Welcome to Washington, there is a question.

Schweickart: An excellent question from Washington D.C. We have made no effort at all to approximate the cost of implementing a universal space rescue system. Our statement in fact identifies that issues including costs would have to be considered in moving ahead with this. The reality, nevertheless, is that one day there will be lives lost in space needlessly if such a capability does not exist. That is the fundamental thing which we recognize and call to the attention of the space-faring nations. The scheduling and cost issues are things that must be taken in account of in terms of the practicalities, but the principal of adopting a universal rescue capability to save lives in space need not wait any further at all; as well as some of the work such as the development of international standards for various aspects of this capability. I will turn it over to Aleksei for any further comment.

Leonov: Translation not available.

Prince Sultan: Thank you very much. We are going now to Atlanta.

Speaker: Yes, I am Janine Brooks and I'd like to know what are the accomplishments in space that you feel have helped mankind the most?

Prince Sultan: Could you please identify yourself and to whom the question is directed.

Speaker: I'm Janine Brooks and the question is directed to the panel.

Prince Sultan: Are you a student or a professional journalist?

Speaker: A student.

Prince Sultan: Oh - that makes it easier then. Well please go ahead and pick a member of the panel to answer your question.

Speaker: Anyone.

Prince Sultan: How about Mr. Merbold.

Merbold: I understood the question is what are the accomplishments in space. Is that correct? I think there are lots of important scientific data. We learned numerous facts about the solar system, about the direction the wind, sun and the Earth. We did a lot of material science experiments in space and learned, for instance, how the diffusion in liquid works and we solved many problems in human physiology. For instance, how the vestibula organ of the human being works. This is to a large extent information that is not only relevant to astronauts in space, or to scientists, but is also relevant to ordinary human being in the market place. In addition, I think there are many technology accomplishments like the highly integrated circuits I think had tremendous benefit from the Apollo program and now they are available to everyone. In addition to all these things you could measure in dollars in rubles or in currency.

There are also philosophical achievements. I think everyone who has went to space has noticed that we all live on a fairly small planet--a very beautiful one. At the same time it is clear from my perspective that its resources are very limited and I think that is an important piece of knowledge it may and should have an impact on our lifestyles in the long future.

Prince Sultan: Thank you very much. And of course, I have to add that we have to be thankful for space technology for making possible this teleconference by satellite from four different places in the world. We go back to Riyadh. Please go ahead.

Speaker: My name is Anatoly Galovostov. I am from the Soviet Union from Tass News Agency. I have a question to Your Highness, Prince Sultan. Your Highness, during our short visit to your country, we had good possibility to see the real progress in many fields. What can you tell us about the Soviet program of space exploration, especially in the aspects of international cooperation and the second part of my question: What can you tell us about the possibilities of the cooperation in this field via the Soviet Union in the light of this conference?

Prince Sultan: Of course Saudi Arabia on the words of His Highness the Defense Minister and the Second Deputy Minister at the opening ceremonies of this Congress Saturday made it very clear that this country has and will always be committed to the use of sophisticated space technologies in the service of it peoples and its development plans--very ambitious development plans--and thank you very much for the reference to that in your question. Saudi Arabia is not new to that particular aspects of technology through the years the four development plans we had and the fifth one we are going through right now. We have used space technologies extensively in the areas of course of extremely sophisticated communication network in the country--one of the most sophisticated in the world perhaps. And we have used through our agreement in the international level with different space agencies in Europe, U.S. and different other areas of the world to utilize the satellite's information and data in order to enhance our understanding and studies of our own geography, environment, and geology. In order to develop a country better and to understand our resources better and, therefore, serving our own development to the furthest extent possible in the area of agriculture, mining and so on.

Also Saudi Arabia has used space communication and education extensively and we have had many aspects of cooperation and participation with international forums such as the UN, different committees and so forth, in the areas of presenting papers and participating in discussions and so on. Therefore, I don't rule out any further development of the cooperation between this country and many other countries in the world--as we always have in every aspect of our development here. We have, of course, have had the highlight of our program here by participating with the American shuttle program on a mission which I had the privilege of joining in 1985--and we have after there continued on with the different other aspects of maybe less visible programs--probably less publicly demanded programs. Now, we come to the next apart of your question, of course Saudi Arabia has always stated and maintained a very clear position of its situation within the world community and will never rule out, I don't imagine, any cooperative opportunities with any nation it sees has a benefit to the development of the programs of this country and its people and to the peaceful approach to its own philosophy of world cooperation we have inside Saudi Arabia since the conception of this country many years ago have maintained and worked very hard towards world cooperation and peaceful issues and technological development, and I think that will always continue.

The next question we will go now to New York, please.

Speaker:

Frank Vernucia, The Space Press. I address my question jointly to Mr. Leonov and to Mr. Schweickart. In the writings of both American astronauts and Soviet cosmonauts, there have been complaints of excessive workloads and in many cases an invasion of privacy. As space travel becomes more lengthy and more numerous, what steps should be taken to insure the rights and safe working conditions of astronauts and cosmonauts?

Leonov:

To be quite serious, quite recently, during my visit to the United States, I saw the freedom station and prior to that I saw our own future space stations. Despite the fact that they are very good and represent major steps forward, I think they have forgotten a little bit about the life that the cosmonauts and astronauts have to lead on them. They are using existing modules and estimates about payloads and the dimensions and weight of these modules. But if we think about future stations, you are going to be working in the next thousand years, and where our children and grandchildren might be working, to be giving more thought to giving these people a little more comfort and spaciousness in their life than we have had up until now and still have. So, some thought has got to be given to that indeed.

Prince Sultan:

I believe the question was also addressed to Rusty.

Schweickart:

Yes, this is a very interesting question. I think the near term responses that the --any questions that might exist today might be worked out very easily between the astronaut and cosmonaut and the people with whom they are coordinating on the ground. However, in the long term future, as Aleksei is indicating, we are quite literally dealing with communities of human beings in space up to an including in the long-term future, children being born in space. And people have already dealt with these long-term questions in the form of discussing the rights of spacekind. I can think of one study done. I would refer you to specifically to some of the proceedings to the International Institute of Space Law in dealing with some of the long-term questions of the rights of individuals and others in space. It's a very interesting subject and I recommend it to your attention.

Prince Sultan:

Thank you. Our next question will be from Washington, D.C. Please go ahead.

Speaker:

Yes, this is Leonard David, with National Space Society Ad Astro Magazine. This is for Arthur Clarke. If the future is not what it used to be,
