Sinn Féin spokesperson on policing visits US

Sinn Féin's spokesman on Policing, Gerry Kelly, MLA, will speak on the issue of policing at the National Committee on American Foreign Policy in New York on April 21st.

Mr. Kelly will put Sinn Féin's view on the vital question of policing in the North of Ireland to this prestigious forum. He will also raise the issue of collusion, particularly in relation to the Pat Finucane case.

Continuing the theme on policing, Gerry Kelly will be the guest speaker at an event organized by the Police Emerald Society - Nassau County on Wednesday evening.

Gerry Kelly will also visit San Francisco and Seattle where he will address the University of Washington School of Law on Monday April 19th.

A Chara:

It is now more than five years since the Good Friday Agreement was approved by the people of Ireland in referenda north and south.

The hope and potential for peace with justice that the Agreement embodied was recognized internationally as a major initiative in one of the most protracted conflicts in the world.

While the peace process and the Agreement have undoubtedly made Ireland a better place for many people on the island, sadly much of the promise within the Agreement has been diluted, ignored or outrightly denied to the people.

Unionism has not been able to embrace the change that the Good Friday Agreement promised. But a Unionist veto over democracy cannot run forever. Sinn Féin has delivered on every commitment made in the Good Friday Agreement. We have gone beyond what was required of us in our efforts to reach out to Unionists and ensure continued progress.

CENTRAL RECORDS SECTION UNIT 1

2004 JUN -2 AM 11: 42

Alex Maskey - First Sinn Féin Mayor of Belfast

The governing Executive established by the 1998 Agreement has been functioning for a total of only 21 months and is presently suspended for the 4th time by improper and unilateral action of the British Government.

ELECTIONS CANCELLED

Assembly elections were scheduled by law to occur last May 1, but the British government first adjourned them for four weeks and then cancelled them. This was done against the wishes of the Irish government and more than 75% of the elected officials in the north. No other democracy in the world would tolerate such action. Despite Tony Blair's claim that the elections had to be cancelled and his effort to blame republicans, the elections have clearly been cancelled simply because Tony Blair does not believe they will produce the result he desires.

We still do not have the new beginning to policing promised by the Agreement or even the reforms contained within the Patten report. The Bill of Rights guaranteed by the Agreement is still non-existent and the reforms to our criminal justice system are slow in production. The Human Rights Commission has not materialized due to disingenuous efforts designed more to frustrate than facilitate this important endeavor, and throughout the north there continues to be sectarian assaults on nationalists and less opportunity for them in jobs and housing.

GROWING STRENGTH OF SINN FÉIN

Despite the difficulties, Sinn Féin has made gains and continues to grow in strength. One of the results we believe the assembly elections would have produced was a clear showing that Sinn Féin commands the majority of the nationalist vote in the north.

Sinn Féin now has a total of 199 elected officials, 132 in the north and 67 in the south. At the last general election in the north, Sinn Féin retained the two MP seats held by Gerry Adams, West Belfast, and Martin McGuinness, Mid Ulster, and added two more, Pat Doherty, West Tyrone, and Michelle Gildernew, Fermanagh-South Tyrone (the Seat Bobby Sands once held). Sinn Féin now has more MP's, 4, than the SDLP, 3. Sinn Féin also has 5 TD's, having added 4 at the last general election to the Cavan Monahan Seat held by Caoimhghín Ó Caoláin.

"There will be a united Ireland. And our task, and that of all sensible Irish political leaders should be to prepare for reunification."

Gerry Adams

In the suspended Executive, Martin McGuinness was the Minister of Education, and Bairbre de Brun, the Minister of Health. They were the two best Ministers in the power sharing government, and we are very proud of them.

New Sinn Féin Office - Omagh, County Tyrone

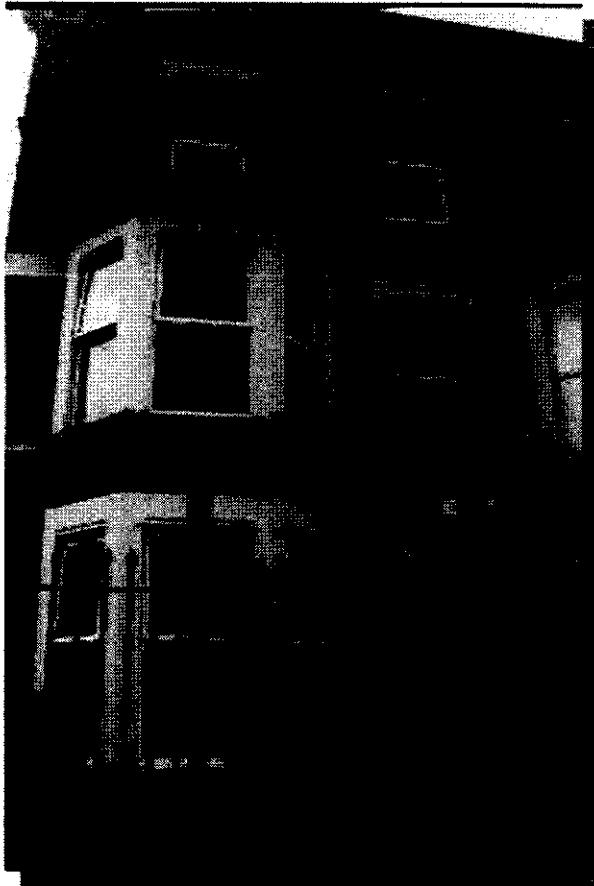

FIRST SINN FÉIN MAYOR OF BELFAST

History was made on June 5, 2002, when Alex Maskey was elected the first ever Sinn Féin Mayor of Belfast. In keeping with the dynamic leadership Sinn Féin has been delivering, Mayor Maskey proved to be a strong and effective Mayor for all of the people of Belfast and reached out to the Unionist community with a genuine hand of concern and respect for them and their traditions. Before the end of his one year term, Mayor Maskey made a historic tour of the U.S. where he officially visited 11 cities, and met with the mayor of each: Boston, New York, Baltimore, Washington DC, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Oakland, San Francisco and Seattle.

Patricia O'Rawe was recently elected the first Sinn Féin Mayor of the historic and important city of Armagh. There is no question she will be a strong candidate for an assembly seat from Newry-Armagh - if the elections are held.

NEW SINN FÉIN OFFICES

In addition to our re-built offices on the Falls Road, which many of you have already visited, your assistance has allowed us to purchase and re-build a major new office in Omagh, County Tyrone and one in north Belfast, both of which were dedicated during the past year.

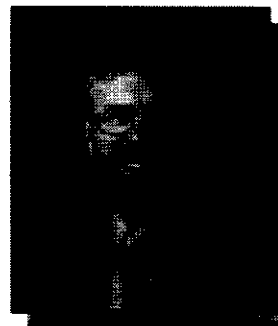

New Sinn Féin Office - North Belfast

You have also provided Martin McGuinness and myself with needed automobiles, without which we could not fully participate in the myriad of meetings and events necessary to continue Sinn Féin's role in the peace process and the march to a united Ireland. Martin's auto was required due to an attack on him by loyalists in Ballymena, during which his former car was wrecked and he escaped serious injury or worse only because of the skill and bravery of his driver.

We hope to be involved in the important assembly election this fall. Although it is far from certain that the election will be held, we must be prepared for it and with your help we will be. Regardless, we will contest a European election next spring and believe we stand a good chance to win our first ever seat in the European Parliament. We assure you that we will not let up in our efforts and that we appreciate very much your participation and support.

Your continued assistance will help us in our effort to bring peace and justice to a united Ireland.

ELECTION SUCCESS

As you have undoubtedly heard by now the Assembly election was held on November 26. The election was held only because of the continuous pressure the British government was under after postponing the election twice.

We wish to thank all of you for helping to ensure that the democratic process mandated by the Good Friday Agreement was allowed to proceed.

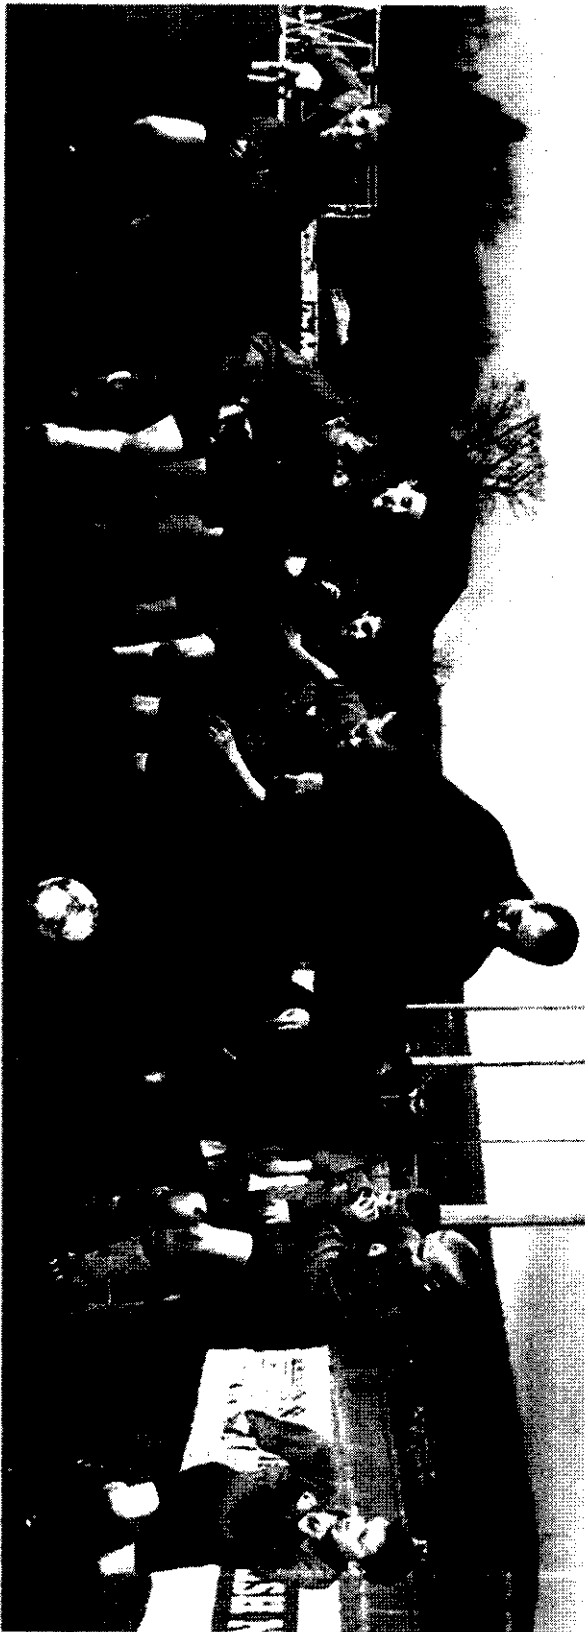

Sinn Féin significantly increased our vote percentage and our number of seats in the Assembly. We are the largest nationalist party in the north. There is no disputing that we speak for the majority of the nationalist people in the six counties.

Our success is a resounding endorsement of Sinn Féin's peace strategy and our determination to see the Good Friday Agreement implemented.

Sinn Féin Assembly Candidates outside Castle Buildings in Belfast.

Gerry Kelly, Sinn Féin's point person on the important issue of police reform, takes a few minutes for play.

PROGRESS MUST CONTINUE

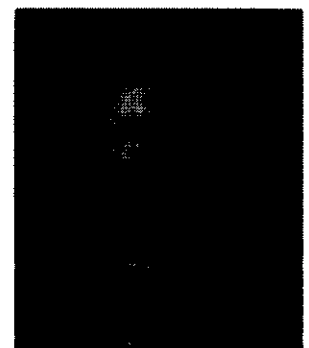

If Ian Paisley and the DUP refuse to work with Sinn Féin and form a power sharing Executive, it is incumbent that the Irish and British governments move forward together. The governments must implement the remainder of the Good Friday Agreement on equality, justice, policing, human rights, a bill of rights and demilitarization. Progress on these issues must not be stalled.

NEXT ELECTION

The next election challenge Sinn Féin faces is the European Parliament Elections in the Spring. Currently, Ian Paisley is the six counties' most recognized representative in Europe. We can change this. Sinn Féin's candidate in the north is Bairbre de Brun, the former Minister of Health. Sinn Féin is confident that Bairbre can win a seat in this election and strengthen the voice of Irish nationalists on the European stage.

THANK YOU

You have helped us become the biggest nationalist party in the north. We appreciate that help. We will not achieve our goal of justice and equality in a free and united Ireland without your continued support.

Sinn Féin Responds

Mitchell Reiss
U.S. Department of State
2201 C Street NW
Washington, DC 20520

Dear Mr. Reiss:

Your comments to a BBC interviewer that Sinn Féin's recent March 15th advertisement in The New York Times, which set forth our well known position on policing in the north of Ireland, contained "massive untruths" are wholly inaccurate.

It is unclear which points you find "untrue". Therefore, we are happy to defend the ad point by point, as set forth below.

"Sinn Féin wants policing in the north of Ireland"

We trust that you accept this point. I can assure you that as parents of children and sons and daughters of the elderly, we have every reason to want a proper policing service.

"We demand the policing service people are entitled to and will not settle simply for the one the British are prepared to give"

I believe the truth of this statement is self-evident. We will not simply settle for the police service the British are prepared to give. Sectarian policing imposed on us by the British has been at the core of the abuse we have suffered since partition. We are extremely serious about getting policing right.

"When the British partitioned Ireland in 1921, they created a sectarian police force to secure a sectarian state. For more than 75 years they operated as a political police force."

It is simply beyond any reasonable dispute that the RUC was implemented as a sectarian force to defend a "Protestant State for a Protestant people" and operated in that fashion for over 75 years.

"In 1998 the Good Friday Agreement promised a new beginning to policing. The Patten Commission was established to recommend the change necessary to create that new beginning."

The Agreement speaks for itself when it states "the agreement provides the opportunity for a new beginning to policing in Northern Ireland with a police service capable of attracting and sustaining support from the community as a whole." And there is no dispute about the role of the Patten Commission.

"The commission made 175 recommendations."

The Patten Report is of record and speaks for itself.

"These changes contained the potential for a new beginning to policing."

We have repeatedly stated our belief that Patten contains such potential. Certainly, you do not maintain otherwise.

"The British Government, however, reneged on its obligations and gutted key elements of Patten's report"

Despite the rhetoric of the establishment that Patten has been implemented, Patten is a written document that can be compared against the changes legislated. They do not match up. Key provisions have been gutted, and no amount of repeated statements to the contrary can change this reality.

The report was gutted "to prevent or delay change."

As noted by Irish News columnist and former SDLP Councillor Brian Feeney (March 4, 2004), the "damage Mandelson did by modifying the Patten proposals and enshrining that modification in law will be with us for a long time." Only an uninformed or ill-intentioned person would deny that the changes to Patten are designed to prevent or delay change.

"British political control of policing remains."

This is irrefutable.

The British Secretary of State and British seurocrats still retain control of policing and justice through the NIO in Belfast and London. Instead of the required civic policing the intelligence agencies such as MI5, Special Branch and civil servants who have handled policing and justice for generations are still in charge. The only way to resolve that situation is to transfer powers on policing and justice to the locally elected democratic Assembly in the north. Democratic accountability is critical.

"The force is not representative of the community and there are no goals and timetables to achieve this."

Again the statistics are of record. There is no dispute that the force is not representative of the community.

There are presently over 9,000 members of the PSNI, (including the Full-time reserve and Part-time reserve). The Northern Ireland Office and Chief Constable Hugh Orde have claimed that 13.6% of all PSNI members are Catholic. In fact, these statistics are a distortion because they reflect only Catholic membership of the PSNI regulars. The composition of Catholics within the PSNI as a whole is 11.6% (at October 2003). This is five years after Patten and after a full cycle (3 years) of 50:50 quota was introduced for new PSNI recruits. The British government has yet to produce any coherent strategy for ensuring representation of nationalists and republicans.

"Key positions are held by human rights abusers."

This was illustrated once again in the January 2004 Police Ombudsman's report on the failure to investigate the loyalist killing of Seán Brown in South Derry in 1997. The killing was not investigated by the RUC and the Police Ombudsman's inquiries were obstructed by the PSNI. The Ombudsman found "no earnest effort was made to identify the persons who murdered Seán Brown."

In fact the Special Branch, which controls loyalist death squads, described by Patten as a 'force within a force' - moved en masse into the PSNI without any mechanism to weed out human rights abusers. London Metropolitan Chief Constable John Stevens, after 14 years and three investigations into collusion, reported in April 2003 that he had uncovered, "collusion, the willful failure to keep records, the absence of accountability, the withholding of evidence, and the extreme of agents being involved in murder". He added, "nationalists were known to be targeted but were not properly warned or protected" and that "unlawful involvement of agents in murder implies that the security forces sanction killing".

"Collusion with loyalist death squads continues."

As noted above, this was illustrated once again in the recent Police Ombudsman's report on the failure to investigate the loyalist killing of Seán Brown in South Derry. The killing was not investigated by the RUC and the Police Ombudsman's inquiries were obstructed by the PSNI.

Over the recent period of 4 years loyalist gangs, most notably the UDA, carried out over four hundred (400) gun and bomb attacks against Catholics in the small North Belfast constituency alone. A number of Catholics were actually murdered yet no one was prosecuted. Special Branch still controls dozens of agents in the Loyalist paramilitary groups who act with impunity from the legal process.

"Police officers with a political agenda continue to fabricate evidence to pervert the course of justice."

In the trial of Noel Abernathy, Autumn 2003, Mrs. Ann Irwin, a forensic scientist gave evidence under oath that interference in the gathering and processing of forensic evidence has carried on throughout Mrs. Irwin's employment in the Forensic Science Agency, involving both the RUC and the PSNI. In the case of Mark Carroll and Martin Brogan, evidence vital to the defense, including information about a Special Branch agent provocateur was concealed by the DPP & PSNI Special Branch in a vain attempt to convict the men. Forensic evidence in many other prosecutions is now being questioned, as a result.

"The chief of police is opposed to inquiries which would expose human rights abusers in his ranks."

Chief Constable Hugh Orde opposes public inquiries into the involvement of police officers and others in the killings of Pat Finucane, Rosemary Nelson, Robert Hamill, and many, many others. In fact the Police Ombudsman's office is worried that Hugh Orde's public emphasis on a "truth process" as opposed to investigations may make her job very difficult in retrospective inquiries already taken up by the Ombudsman.

"The chief of police is refusing to co-operate with inquests into killings by state forces."

PSNI interference in inquests continues despite being legally required to produce the evidence. In a recent case, the inquest of Roseanne Mallon and nine other people from Tyrone, Hugh Orde has again refused to hand over evidence crucial to the inquests.

"The police force is not subject to democratic accountability."

As stated above no provisions have been enacted to provide democratic accountability for policing in the north. To have an all-Ireland approach to justice, power must be transferred to the Assembly. This has still not been achieved; six years after the setting up of the first Assembly. Policing remains directly under the political control of the British government and its agencies. There is no timetable for the ending of British government control.

"Sinn Féin took our position on policing to the electorate in November and won a resounding endorsement."

Prior to the election in November 2003 Sinn Féin made public, and indeed was publicly criticized for, our position with regard to policing. The people voted and the nationalist community gave Sinn Féin 60% of their vote.

"We are determined to get the policing service people deserve."

We do not believe anybody doubts our determination. Let us be clear. Those who vote for Sinn Féin want a police service which is truly representative and politically accountable. These are the people arguably who have suffered most from partisan political policing in the past.

"The policing service the peace process requires."

Nobody should question the need for proper policing in order for the peace process to fulfill its potential.

We stand over this point by point defense of our advertisement. We are determined to get policing right for the first time in the history of British interference in Ireland. This is a central and indispensable aspect of the peace process.

Yours truly,

Martin McGuinness, MP, MLA
Chief Negotiator, Sinn Féin

THE TRUTH ABOUT POLICING IN THE NORTH OF IRELAND

Sinn Féin wants policing in the north of Ireland;
but we demand the policing service people are entitled to and will not settle simply for the one the British are prepared to give.

When the British partitioned Ireland in 1921, they created a sectarian police force to secure a sectarian state. For more than 75 years they operated as a political police force.

In 1998 the Good Friday Agreement promised a new beginning to policing. The Patten commission was established to recommend the change necessary to create that new beginning.

The commission made 175 recommendations. These changes contained the potential for a new beginning to policing.

The British Government, however, reneged on its obligations and gutted key elements of Patten's report to prevent or delay change.

Sinn Féin has refused to endorse the police force because:

- British political control of policing remains.
- The force is not representative of the community and there are no goals and timetables to achieve this.
- Key positions are held by human rights abusers.
- Collusion with loyalist death squads continues.
- Police officers with a political agenda continue to fabricate evidence to prevent the course of justice.
- The chief of police is opposed to inquiries which would expose human rights abusers in his ranks.
- The chief of police is refusing to co-operate with inquests into killings by state forces.
- The police force is not subject to democratic accountability.

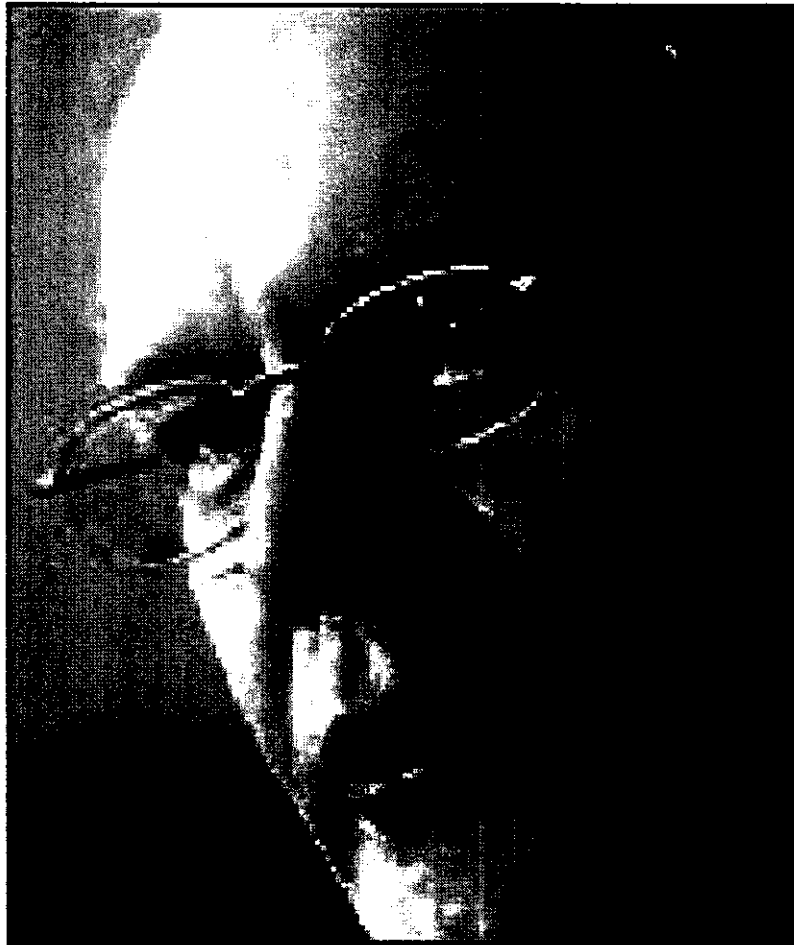

Sinn Féin took our position on policing to the electorate in November and won a resounding endorsement. We are determined to get the policing service people deserve; the policing service the peace process requires.
