Gerry Adams MP Sinn Féin

*Celebrating the man primarily responsible
for bringing peace to Ireland.*

Gerry Adams was born in 1948 in West Belfast where he continues to reside with his family. He became involved in the civil rights campaign in the late 1960s and was interned without trial in 1972. When he was released in July 1972 he took part in secret talks in London between Irish republicans and the then British Secretary of State, William Whitelaw, which gave rise to a brief cease fire between the British Army and the Irish Republican Army.

After arrest with other leading republicans in Belfast in 1973 he tried to escape from Long Kesh Prison Camp. For this he was imprisoned and eventually released in 1976. He played a leading role in the campaign for political status for political prisoners in the 1981 Hunger Strike. He was central to the formation of Sinn Féin's electoral strategy. In 1982 he topped the poll in West Belfast in the Assembly elections.

In 1997 and again in 2001 he was re-elected as MP for West Belfast and in 1998 he was elected to the Assembly. Gerry Adams has been President of Sinn Féin since 1983. He was instrumental in developing Féin's peace strategy. It began with the key documents, Scenario for Peace (1987) and Towards a Lasting peace in Ireland (1992). Since that time there have been many political engagements with the British and Irish Governments resulting in the All-Ireland peace accord and formation of the historic partnership government between Irish Republicans and Unionists in the north of Ireland.

He has traveled internationally to advance the peace process particularly in the United States, Britain and South Africa. He has also campaigned on issues of human rights and justice, including the demand for the cancellation of world debt.

A member of PEN, the international guild of writers, Gerry Adams has published several books including: A Pathway to Peace, The Politics of Irish Freedom and Selected Writings, his autobiography "Before the Dawn" and An Irish Voice.

*Gerry Adams MP
Sinn Féin*

for bringing peace to Ireland.*

Gerry Adams was born in 1948 in West Belfast where he continues to reside with his family. He became involved in the civil rights campaign in the late 1960s and was interned without trial in 1972. When he was released in July 1972 he took part in secret talks in London between Irish republicans and the then British Secretary of State, William Whitelaw, which gave rise to a brief cease fire between the British Army and the Irish Republican Army.

After arrest with other leading republicans in Belfast in 1973 he tried to escape from Long Kesh Prison Camp. For this he was imprisoned and eventually released in 1976. He played a leading role in the campaign for political status for political prisoners in the 1981 Hunger Strike. He was central to the formation of Sinn Féin's electoral strategy. In 1982 he topped the poll in West Belfast in the Assembly elections.

In 1997 and again in 2001 he was re-elected as MP for West Belfast and in 1998 he was elected to the Assembly.

Gerry Adams has been President of Sinn Féin since 1983. He was instrumental in developing Féin's peace strategy. It began with the key documents, Scenario for Peace (1987) and Towards a Lasting peace in Ireland (1992). Since that time there have been many political engagements with the British and Irish Governments resulting in the All-Ireland peace accord and formation of the historic partnership government between Irish Republicans and Unionists in the north of Ireland.

He has traveled internationally to advance the peace process particularly in the United States, Britain and South Africa. He has also campaigned on issues of human rights and justice, including the demand for the cancellation of world debt.

A member of PEN, the international guild of writers, Gerry Adams has published several books including: A Pathway to Peace, The Politics of Irish Freedom and Selected Writings, his autobiography "Before the Dawn" and An Irish Voice.
