Subject: Letter pasted and attached responding to a mention of me in Ken Silverstein's July 10 article on Georgia

Because I was mentioned rather prominently in the referenced article, I would hope you would agree to publish this brief response. For verification purposes, I can be reached at (202) 543-8480 during normal business hours. Thank you for your consideration.

Randy Scheunemann

To the editor—

I was more than a little surprised by Ken Silverstein's recent article ("Georgia Provides Troops for Iraq: Gets a Free Pass on Human Rights?") which misrepresents the democratic progress made in Georgia since the Rose Revolution of 2003. By citing one Human Rights Watch report on prison conditions and comparing Georgia's record to Russia's, one would be led to believe the rule of law in Georgia is imperiled. Nothing could be further from the truth. One needs to look no further than the respected and independent Freedom House rankings which show Georgia's improvement in areas such as judicial independence and while documenting severe backsliding in Russia.[1] Or one could note that the World Bank recently named Georgia the number one reforming country.[2] Instead of an objective survey, Silverstein unquestioningly quotes a defense lawyer for a Georgian implicated in a violent anti-government plot, Maia Topuria, and claims she and her co-defendants are "members of the political opposition." In fact, the pro-Russia "Justice" Party was formed by the Russian-sheltered former intelligence chief wanted on an INTERPOL warrant for the 1995 attempted assassination of former Georgian President Shevardnadze. The "Justice" Party is taken seriously only by its paymasters in Moscow. The authentic political opposition in Georgia has denounced the "Justice" Party for the Russian front it is.[3] A more critical reporter might have examined how this defendant is paying the bills for high-priced U.S. legal talent and for the Washington lobbying representation she has retained.

I have been privileged to advise the government of Georgia since 2004 in its historic efforts to build a vibrant and pro-Western democracy – one that is notably willing to share burdens in the difficult battlefields of Iraq. That Silverstein sees something nefarious in this display of courage and shared values speaks far more to his preconceptions than to the reality of democratic Georgia today.

Sincerely,

Randy Scheunemann
