Major General Anton Wessely, the commander of the EUFOR, on Friday lined up the members of the EUFOR Multinational Battalion, including the recently deployed reserve forces.

Wessely said on this occasion that the EUFOR would be continuously assess whether it is necessary for the reserve forces to remain in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

“As commander, I activated the reserve forces, but not because of the deteriorating security situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina. On the contrary, our indicators of threats and changes in a safe and stable environment have not changed in recent weeks. My decision to activate the reserve forces stemmed from the soldiers’ obligation to be ready for any situation,” Wessely said.
