Economic Ties Between the United States and Saudi Arabia

Overview

- The United States and Saudi Arabia have been trading partners as far back as 1931.
 - This is 14 years before the historic meeting between President Franklin Roosevelt and Saudi King Abdul Aziz Ibn Saud in 1945 that established U.S.-Saudi relations.
- While founded primarily on oil and energy trade, the business relationship between the U.S. and Saudi Arabia has expanded tremendously over the past 20 years into new sectors and industries.

U.S.-Saudi Arabia Trade Relationship

- Saudi Arabia is the second largest trading partner for the U.S. in the Middle East.
 - The U.S. imported $13.4 billion from Saudi Arabia and exported $14.3 billion worth of goods to Saudi Arabia in 2019.
- The U.S. is Saudi Arabia's second largest importer, accounting for 11 percent of Saudi Arabia's total imports, and is Saudi Arabia's eighth largest exporter.
- Top exported goods, from the U.S. to Saudi Arabia, include machinery, cars, air vehicles, electrical appliances, and medical imaging devices.
- Top imported goods from Saudi Arabia to the U.S., aside from oil, include metal products, organic chemical products, aluminum, fertilizers, and iron and casting (steel).
- According the latest data from the Department of Commerce, U.S. exports of goods and services to Saudi Arabia supported an estimated 165,000 jobs.

Economic Ties Between the United States and Saudi Arabia

Vision 2030

- Through Vision 2030, Saudi Arabia is transforming its economy, its culture, and its society.
 - This provides an opportunity for the U.S. and Saudi Arabia to further strengthen and diversify their trade relationship for the 21st century economy.
 - Under Vision 2030, Saudi Arabia's economy is diversifying with investments in renewable energy including wind and solar energy, tourism, and other high-tech industries.
 - Vision 2030's smart city initiatives has opened the door to potential partnerships with U.S.-based companies like Amazon, Google, Apple, and other American tech leaders.

Conclusion

- A nation's business leaders and community are some of the most important diplomats a country can have.
 - The business leaders of the U.S. and Saudi Arabia exemplify this as their strong economic bonds have strengthened the U.S. and Saudi economies and people for decades.
