Cowboys injury report week 5

Dallas Cowboys welcome Green Bay Packers to AT&T Stadium Sunday afternoon and after being pretty banged up for the past few weeks, it looks like the team could welcome some familiar faces back on the field. That's a good thing too, because the Cowboys are going to need all hands on deck against Aaron Rodgers and company. Left tackle Tyron Smith (ankle) is the only Cowboys player listed as out for Week 5 on the final injury report. He suffered a high ankle sprain in the team's final drive against the Saints. Cameron Fleming starts in Smith's absence. There was some concern about the second tackle spot at the start of the week as La'el Collins (back) did not practice at the start of the week and was a limited participant on Friday. He's officially listed as questionable for Sunday. Collins wouldn't be able to participate then Connor Williams could take his place after sliding over from guard. Williams took reps on the tackle during practice this week if his services are needed there, as did youngster Brandon Knight. Also listed officially listed as questionable are nose tackle Antwaun Woods (knee), defensive lineman Tyrone Crawford (hip), and wideout Michael Gallup (knee). There is a great possibility that all three are available to play on Sunday. Another player to watch is All-Pro defensive end DeMarcus Lawrence (heel). Lawrence was limited at the beginning of the week, but was a full participant in Friday's practice and should be good to go Sunday. For the Green Bay Packers, it looks like they will be without the services of their star wide receiver Davante Adams (toe). Adams sustained the injury after having a career day with 10 catches for 180 yards in last week's contest against the Philadelphia Eagles. Also sure to miss the game are backup running back Jamaal Williams (concussion) and cornerback Tony Brown (hamstring). Home corner Kevin King (groin) did not participate in training all week and is officially listed as questionable. Starting tackle Bryan Bulaga (shoulder) was limited all week and is listed as questionable. The Dallas Cowboys will head to Cincinnati to take on the Bengals with three players listed as questionable. Ezekiel Elliott is doubtful with a calf injury, and he was limited in training today. Zeke has made it clear that he intends to play, but Mike McCarthy said earlier today that it will be a medical decision because they don't want to do anything to promote the injury. Anthony Brown is trying to come back from a rib injury and was limited in practice today and is officially questionable. With Chidobe Awuzie moved to the COVID-19 list, taking Brown back into action would be a big boost for the Cowboys defense. Donovan Wilson is officially doubtful, but he hasn't trained all week after missing the game on Tuesday night, so it's likely he won't see action on Sunday. Aldon Smith has Fighting a foot injury but he is not listed as questionable or out, so looks to be a go for the game. Cameron Erving has been officially ruled out. No word yet on Tyler Biadasz and his status. He's not officially back on the list yet so he won't show up on the practice report today. The Cowboys could choose to change his status tomorrow given that he practiced today, but betting money would be that they would wait until the next game. The Bengals have three players who are doubtful for Tee Higgins, Mackensie Alexander and Brandon Wilson. Higgins is reportedly likely to play. location: media | arena: nfl | pageType: damage | section: | snail: | sports: football | route: team_page_injuries | 6 keys: media/spl/nfl/reg/free/injuries_team Player Position Updated Injury Injury Status Z.
