SIMONE LEIGH Brick House

The inaugural commission for the High Line Plinth

June 5, 2019 – September 2020
On the High Line at the Spur, at 30th St. and 10th Ave.

New York, NY (August 29, 2018) – Presented by Friends of the High Line, High Line Art announced today that Brick House by artist Simone Leigh will be the first commission for the High Line Plinth. Located on the High Line at West 30th Street and 10th Avenue, the Plinth is a new landmark destination for major public art commissions in New York City. Designed as the focal point of the Spur, the newest section of the park which will open June 5, 2019, the Plinth will be the first space on the High Line dedicated solely to visual art, featuring a rotating program of new commissions. Leigh's artwork will be installed in June 5, 2019 to coincide with the opening of the Spur, and will be on view through September 2020.

For the Plinth, Leigh presents Brick House, a sixteen-foot-tall bronze bust of a Black woman.

HIGH LINE ART

The torso is a combination of the forms of a skirt and a clay house. The figure stands tall and monumental atop the Plinth, gazing resolutely down 10th Avenue. Brick House's head is crowned with an afro framed by cornrow braids that extend off the head into four braids, each ending with a cowrie shell. The domed shape of the shoulders and bust are adorned with a pattern of elongated ridges. Brick House is the first monumental work in Anatomy of Architecture, Leigh's continuing series of sculptures that combine architectural forms from regions as varied as West Africa and the American South with the human body. The sculpture references numerous architectural styles: Batammaliba architecture from Benin and Togo; the teleuk of the Mousgoum people of Cameroon and Chad; and the restaurant Mammy's Cupboard from the southern U.S. All three references inform both the formal elements of the work—the conflated image of woman and architecture—and its conceptual framework.

Leigh's Brick House will be centered on the Spur, standing in sharp contrast to the disparate elements of the immediate architectural landscape. The Plinth is the focal point of the Spur, a site whose architectural and human scales are in constant vertiginous negotiation, surrounded by a competitive landscape of glass-and-steel towers shooting up from among older industrial-era brick buildings. In this space, Leigh's magnificent Black female figure challenges visitors to think more immediately about the architecture around them, and how it reflects customs, values, priorities, and society as a whole.

Simone Leigh works across sculpture, video, installation, and social practice, stitching together references from different historical periods and distant geographical locations. In her densely researched practice, Leigh focuses on how the body, society, and architecture inform and reveal one another. In tandem, Leigh examines the construction of Black female subjectivity, both through specific historical figures such as Josephine Baker and Katherine Dunham, and more generally through overlapping historical lineages across Europe, Africa, the U.S., and the Caribbean. Her intersectional practice draws on a range of disciplines, including the history of architecture, ethnography, feminist discourse, folklore, dance, and histories of political resistance. For Leigh, "architecture is a text that we can read to understand the ontological, philosophical, and psychological expressions of a culture."

"We're thrilled to present Simone Leigh's Brick House as the first commission for the High Line Plinth," says Cecilia Alemani, the Donald R. Mullen, Jr. Director & Chief Curator of High Line Art. "The sculpture's majestic poise will cast a sense of calm determination over the plaza and buzzing streets below. Leigh's practice conveys a reckoning with contemporary and historical relationships between the body, architecture, and society, as well as with questions as to whose visages and experiences we monumentalize in our public squares."

Leigh's work was selected from a short list of 12 proposals by artists Jonathan Berger, Minerva Cuevas, Jeremy Deller, Sam Durant, Charles Gaines, Lena Henke, Matthew Day Jackson, Simone Leigh, Roman Ondak, Paola Pivi, Haim Steinbach, and Cosima von Bonin, narrowed down from over 50 total proposals.

ABOUT THE HIGH LINE

Owned by the City of New York, the High Line works with its communities, neighborhoods, and city to reimagine public space. We raise nearly 100% of our own annual budget for programming, maintenance, and operations, in partnership with NYC Parks.

Through excellence in operations, stewardship, innovative programming, and world-class design, we seek to engage the vibrant and diverse community on and around the High Line, to raise the essential private funding to help complete the High Line's construction, and to create an endowment for its future operations.

SUPPORT

Major support of the High Line Plinth comes from a dedicated group of contemporary art leaders and philanthropists. The High Line Plinth Committee is committed to realizing significant commissions and the public success of the Plinth. It includes Shelley Fox Aarons, Fairfax Dorn, Andrew Hall, Hermine Riegerl Heller, J. Tomilson Hill, Dorothy Lichtenstein, Donald R. Mullen, Jr., Mario J. Palumbo, Jr, and Anonymous.

Lead support for High Line Art comes from Amanda and Don Mullen. Major support for High Line Art is provided by Shelley Fox Aarons and Philip E. Aarons, The Brown Foundation, Inc. of Houston, and Charina Endowment Fund. High Line Art is supported, in part, with public funds from the New York State Council on the Arts with the support of Governor Andrew Cuomo and the New York State Legislature, and from the New York City Department of Cultural Affairs in partnership
