Research in progress

Throughout my time on researching about human cloning I have found many credible sources. One of these sources is “Say No to Human Clones: First Monkeys, and then us? There are good reasons why Human Reproductive cloning must stay off limits, says Marcy arnovsky.” This article was written by Marcy Darnovsky , I found this by using CCNY’s database. This is a viable source because this was written by a scientist with experience in the cloning field, I will be able to use this source to effectively support my ideas because it has various reasons as to why human cloning should not be allowed. Another source I have found is “Reproductive cloning Arguments Pro and Con”, I found this source with a simple search on google, this is a viable source because it was created by the center for genetics and society. I can use this source to effectively support my ideas because of its neutral view on human cloning it provides pros and cons to human cloning. I have found one source that I will be discarding was created by national human genome research institute, I am excluding this source because it provides no argument or reasoning about a question on human cloning, it only provides an explanation on the process of cloning. However, I have much more research to do I need to find more reliable sources that provide data about the effects of human cloning on society.
