

New York City Area Sees Season's First Snowstorm

By Don Sutherland

With December off to its coldest start in 20 years, it was probably only a matter of time before New York City was visited by snow. Saturday night saw a storm bring the season's first accumulating snowfall to much of the region. Although Central Park measured just 2.7", parts of Long Island saw more than 7".

The snowfall was sufficient to transform the New York Botanical Garden into a magical world of white. Five photos:

