Ira Sachs, 2016, U.S., 85m | For 8th Grade and Up

Friday, November 7: 10:00am–12:30pm

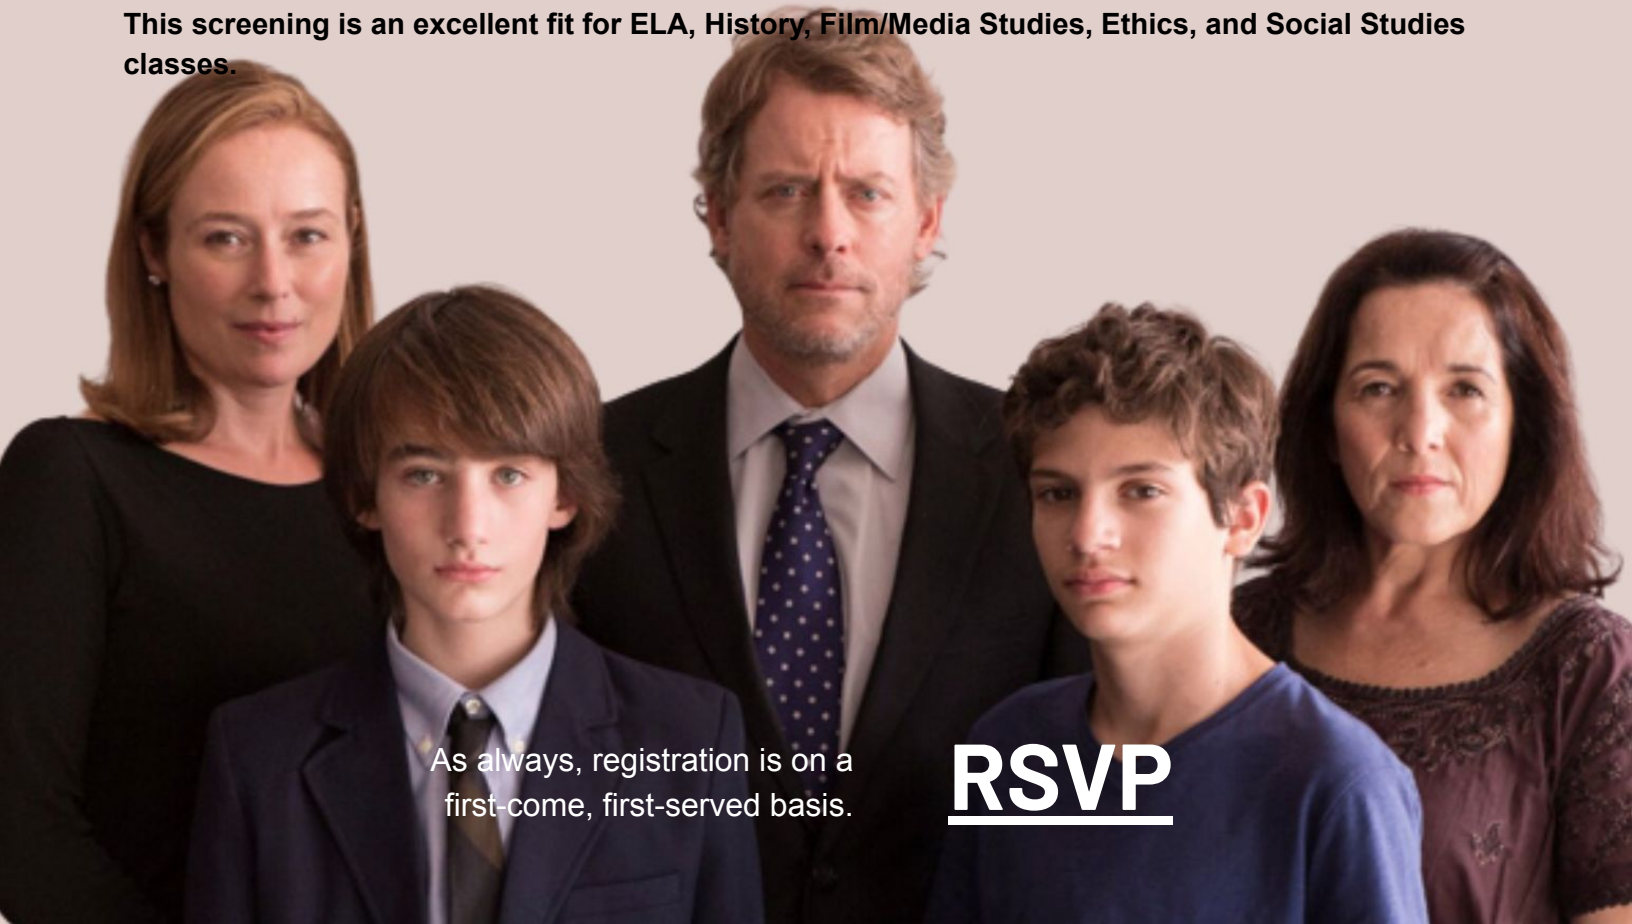

Q&A with Ira Sachs and actor Theo Taplitz following the screening

Film at Lincoln Center | 144 W 65th Street

As a tie-in to the release of Ira Sachs' Peter Hjar's Day, we're presenting one of his earlier features, Little Men.

When his grandfather dies, 13-year-old Jake moves with his family from Manhattan back into his father's old Brooklyn home, where he meets Tony, whose single mother Leonor runs a dress shop downstairs. Soon, Jake's parents Brian and Kathy ask Leonor to sign another, more expensive lease for the store, which kindles a feud between the adults. With its timely and nuanced story of teenage friendship shaped by questions of displacement, class, and gentrification in Brooklyn, Little Men offers a compassionate look at how adult problems can affect childhood bonds- and delivers another moving New York drama from director Ira Sachs.

This screening is an excellent fit for ELA, History, Film/Media Studies, Ethics, and Social Studies classes.

As always, registration is on a first-come, first-served basis.
