

Expressions of Human Emotion.

By:Angel Morillo

To begin these photos represent moment I felt truly human and could show emotion, my ability to show emotion had been severely damaged and these photos also represent a moment I managed to make a lasting repair. A Gingerbread house representing the broken house I am in and a new foundation I can rebuild parts of my humanity and emotion. Shade covering the sun representing the negative parts of my early life clouding the positive parts of life, and the positive parts of my life trying to shine through the shade.

The key to my room represents the place I can try to rebuild myself and prevent my family from breaking anything that I have built up mentally. However it is also used to block out my family mainly my dad from getting Liquor. After he left for a time his room was free so I moved in but after he came back that's were my family hides all the liquor. Still upset that my mom let him back in but can't control what she does.

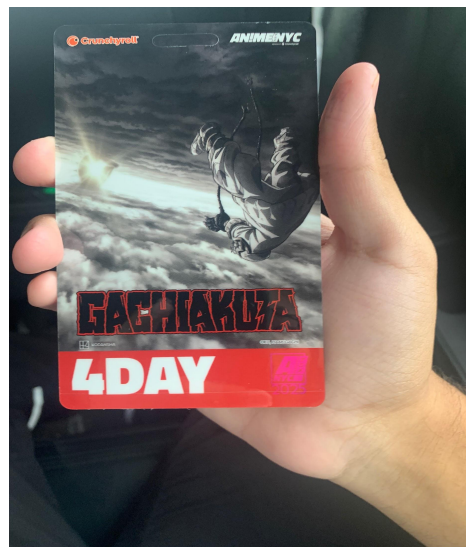

The first three photos proof if my beginning and healing albeit very small. The healing of the self inflicted burns, the healing of my severe mental health issues, the healing of my physical health, and finding joy in things that I love. One might call it my “character Development.”

The last three photos represent the moments in the year of 2025 I felt truly happy. The year has been rough but manageable, I graduated high school, got a Job, and started collage. The photos are moments I had built over the course of 2025, moments where my healing has been solidified. My prom king nomination, and going to anime nyc for a second time.

Oh first of I didn't become prom king and i'm happy I didn't, I don't like the idea of being Prom King. But going to prom was a last minute decision but it went well considering what happened. When this happened I was surprised by the fact I felt happy and during this moment and prom I was able to do some things that would allow me to leave high school with some more finalised character development like making genuine friends, and learning about the type of people I'd like in my life. In my opinion life is no matter what type of experience you had in something you left with something core in your life.

To end it, the photo of Jatvis Center and my badge for anime 2025 show another moment where I decide to commit to something and not just do it once. I left Anime nyc 2025 feeling happy, hopeful, and ready to go again this time with more people. These are my moments of genuine human emotion and am happy I am able to feel them.
