

How much did you know about the subject before we started?

I knew nothing about educational injustice, ive never felt the need to explore into it mainly because I have never experienced it or have seen it so I thought it wasn't a common and recognized thing.

What problems did you encounter while you were working on this piece? How did you solve them?

Finding actual proof of the injustice is rather difficult so instead of solving them I settled for just examples of those injustices.

What does this piece reveal about you as a learner?

It reveals that I'm very aware of the issues other students might face in the educational system and that their stories deserve to heard just as much as the regular student life stories. But it also reveals my media literacy through the way I analyze and interpret the piece in my rhetorical analysis.

Did you do your work the way other people did theirs? In what ways was your work or process similar or different?

Yes I did my work how the examples you gave did it. It is very similar I used the same format and editing they did in my own like the bolding and section titling.

What would you change if you had the chance to redo this assignment?

I would change the topic since this isn't something I relate to but more of something I know exists I would rather talk about something affected me at some point or something that I have went through.
