

Mia Doreen G.

CCNY - Killer Stories Composition with Professor Metenko

9/16/25

Classroom Description:

One would get here by walking to the 2nd floor of the CCNY Shepard Hall building, or using the elevator if they wish, and going all the way to room 276. The twisting of an arm or leg happens every now and then in the cramped space. In this classroom, there is little space for bodies to sit in chairs, but ample space for ideas to flood the room. The floorboards are browning, such as the fall leaves outside the window, and the ceiling, mirroring the floor, holds circular hanging light fixtures that illuminate the room in a bright yellowish light. The walls are a bit mangled, but underneath is the color of calming cream. The windows attached to that wall are long and vertical, letting in blue hues when the blank curtains are opened. The smartboard in the center of the room casts the faintest purple hue at the room's forefront. Typing may fill your ears, chatter too, and even the sound of your own monologue spilling out onto the page of your assignment. This is one of the many homes of the people's ideas. This is classroom S-276.

Room Description:

A sharp turn in a room of pink that lies at the end of the house's hallway. The walls are white and filled with frames holding dried flowers, motivational quotes, family pictures, and celebrity inspirations. Pieces of pink, in varying hues, speckles every corner; the owner's favorite color. Her personal colorful paintings line the wall over her bed in no specific order. The windows lining the other walls opposite are square, white, with pearl lined curtains. These windows show green trees outside. The walls also are keeper to her 'life wall', or the collection of papers, decor, and achievements she has placed there throughout her life to grow it into a big timeline she can see daily. Letters from her loved ones also stay there. Artifacts like a christmas barbie doll, a plushie or two, and a piggy bank lay on a plank of wood atop her heater, a recycled decor. Her desk is cluttered with reading books, notebooks, and pens. Of course, her fish lies atop her desk too in his colorful tank that lights up in the dark. Her clothes lay on the desk chair, and her floorboards are wooden and vertical lining. This is the same lining her big radio sits atop that she uses to play music daily, without fail. This is her bedroom.

- Mia Doreen George