

How did I feel about the assignment?

I enjoyed writing the letter of introduction because I was able to reflect about the things I've done so far in my life, and it made me feel nostalgic even though it wasn't that long ago. Taking the time to slow down and look at the things from my past and what make me me. The assignment also helped introduce myself to someone in a different way beyond just meeting someone face to face then using words to give my name, what I like or who I am. Especially to a company that I'm interested in, I can hopefully stand out from the rest of the applicants who want the same position and put my best self forward that I wouldn't be able to show otherwise. It also helped me gain the experience of researching a company and going in depth about their goals and ideals, which is something I haven't done a lot in the past only because I never really had a plan as to which company I would apply to or what job position I even wanted. I only had the end goal I had of becoming a computer engineer and making enough money to live comfortably. Talking about the assignment, it made me visually represent the ideas that I had in my brain about what I enjoy and who I am. Other than that, I think the assignment was very useful to me just to better understand the main idea and focus of technical writing and why it's needed. It also helped me understand the different components that comes with technical writing like how visual representation is important, like how I mentioned before. Visual representation is useful for those who just understand information in a different medium, it helps grasp the idea easier and helps them retain the idea that I was trying to convey, which is something I will make sure to continue to do as I transition into the next stage of my life. Overall, the assignment was informative and entertaining to do and showed me how technical writing is under the same umbrella as writing but it's in its own separate idea with its own rules to understand and follow.
