

California Park & Recreation Society Education Division

Training Development Process Why Teach at a Conference or Workshop of Your Peers?

Benefits of planning and conducting a training session for your peers are numerous.

Here are our most significant reasons:

Teach to make a difference

Teaching is about being a “Lifelong Learner”—lifelong learning is a core value of our industry

You will never learn a topic better than when you start to teach it

Develop communication skills

Develop leadership skills

Teaching provides evidence of knowledge and preparation for vital skill sets and will help you be more competitive with job searches

We expect that attendees come to conferences and workshops to get the following experiences:

- To garner knowledge, skills, and tools that will help them increase their personal and their organizations' innovation capabilities
- To enjoy at least three in-depth conversations with experts (like you)
- To grow their network by at least seven people who face similar challenges
- To get at least 10 new ideas for themselves or their organizations
- To spend three days totally focused on solutions to service delivery
- To develop new skills/competencies by experiencing techniques; learning to use them.
- To make meaningful connections with peers that will encourage future contact/sharing
- To interact with experts in the field
- To validate their ideas and practices
- To hear real stories about what works and what doesn't work
- To be recognized as a change agent and leader in innovation
- To learn how to explain & implement new ideas to peers and management

You can play a role in making the above items happen for the professionals in our field. Consider teaching at our conference!

Contact us!

Leslie Fritz, CPRP, Director of Education, leslie@cprs.org

Jeff Amberson Training Coordinator, jeff@cprs.org

