The Hunger Games

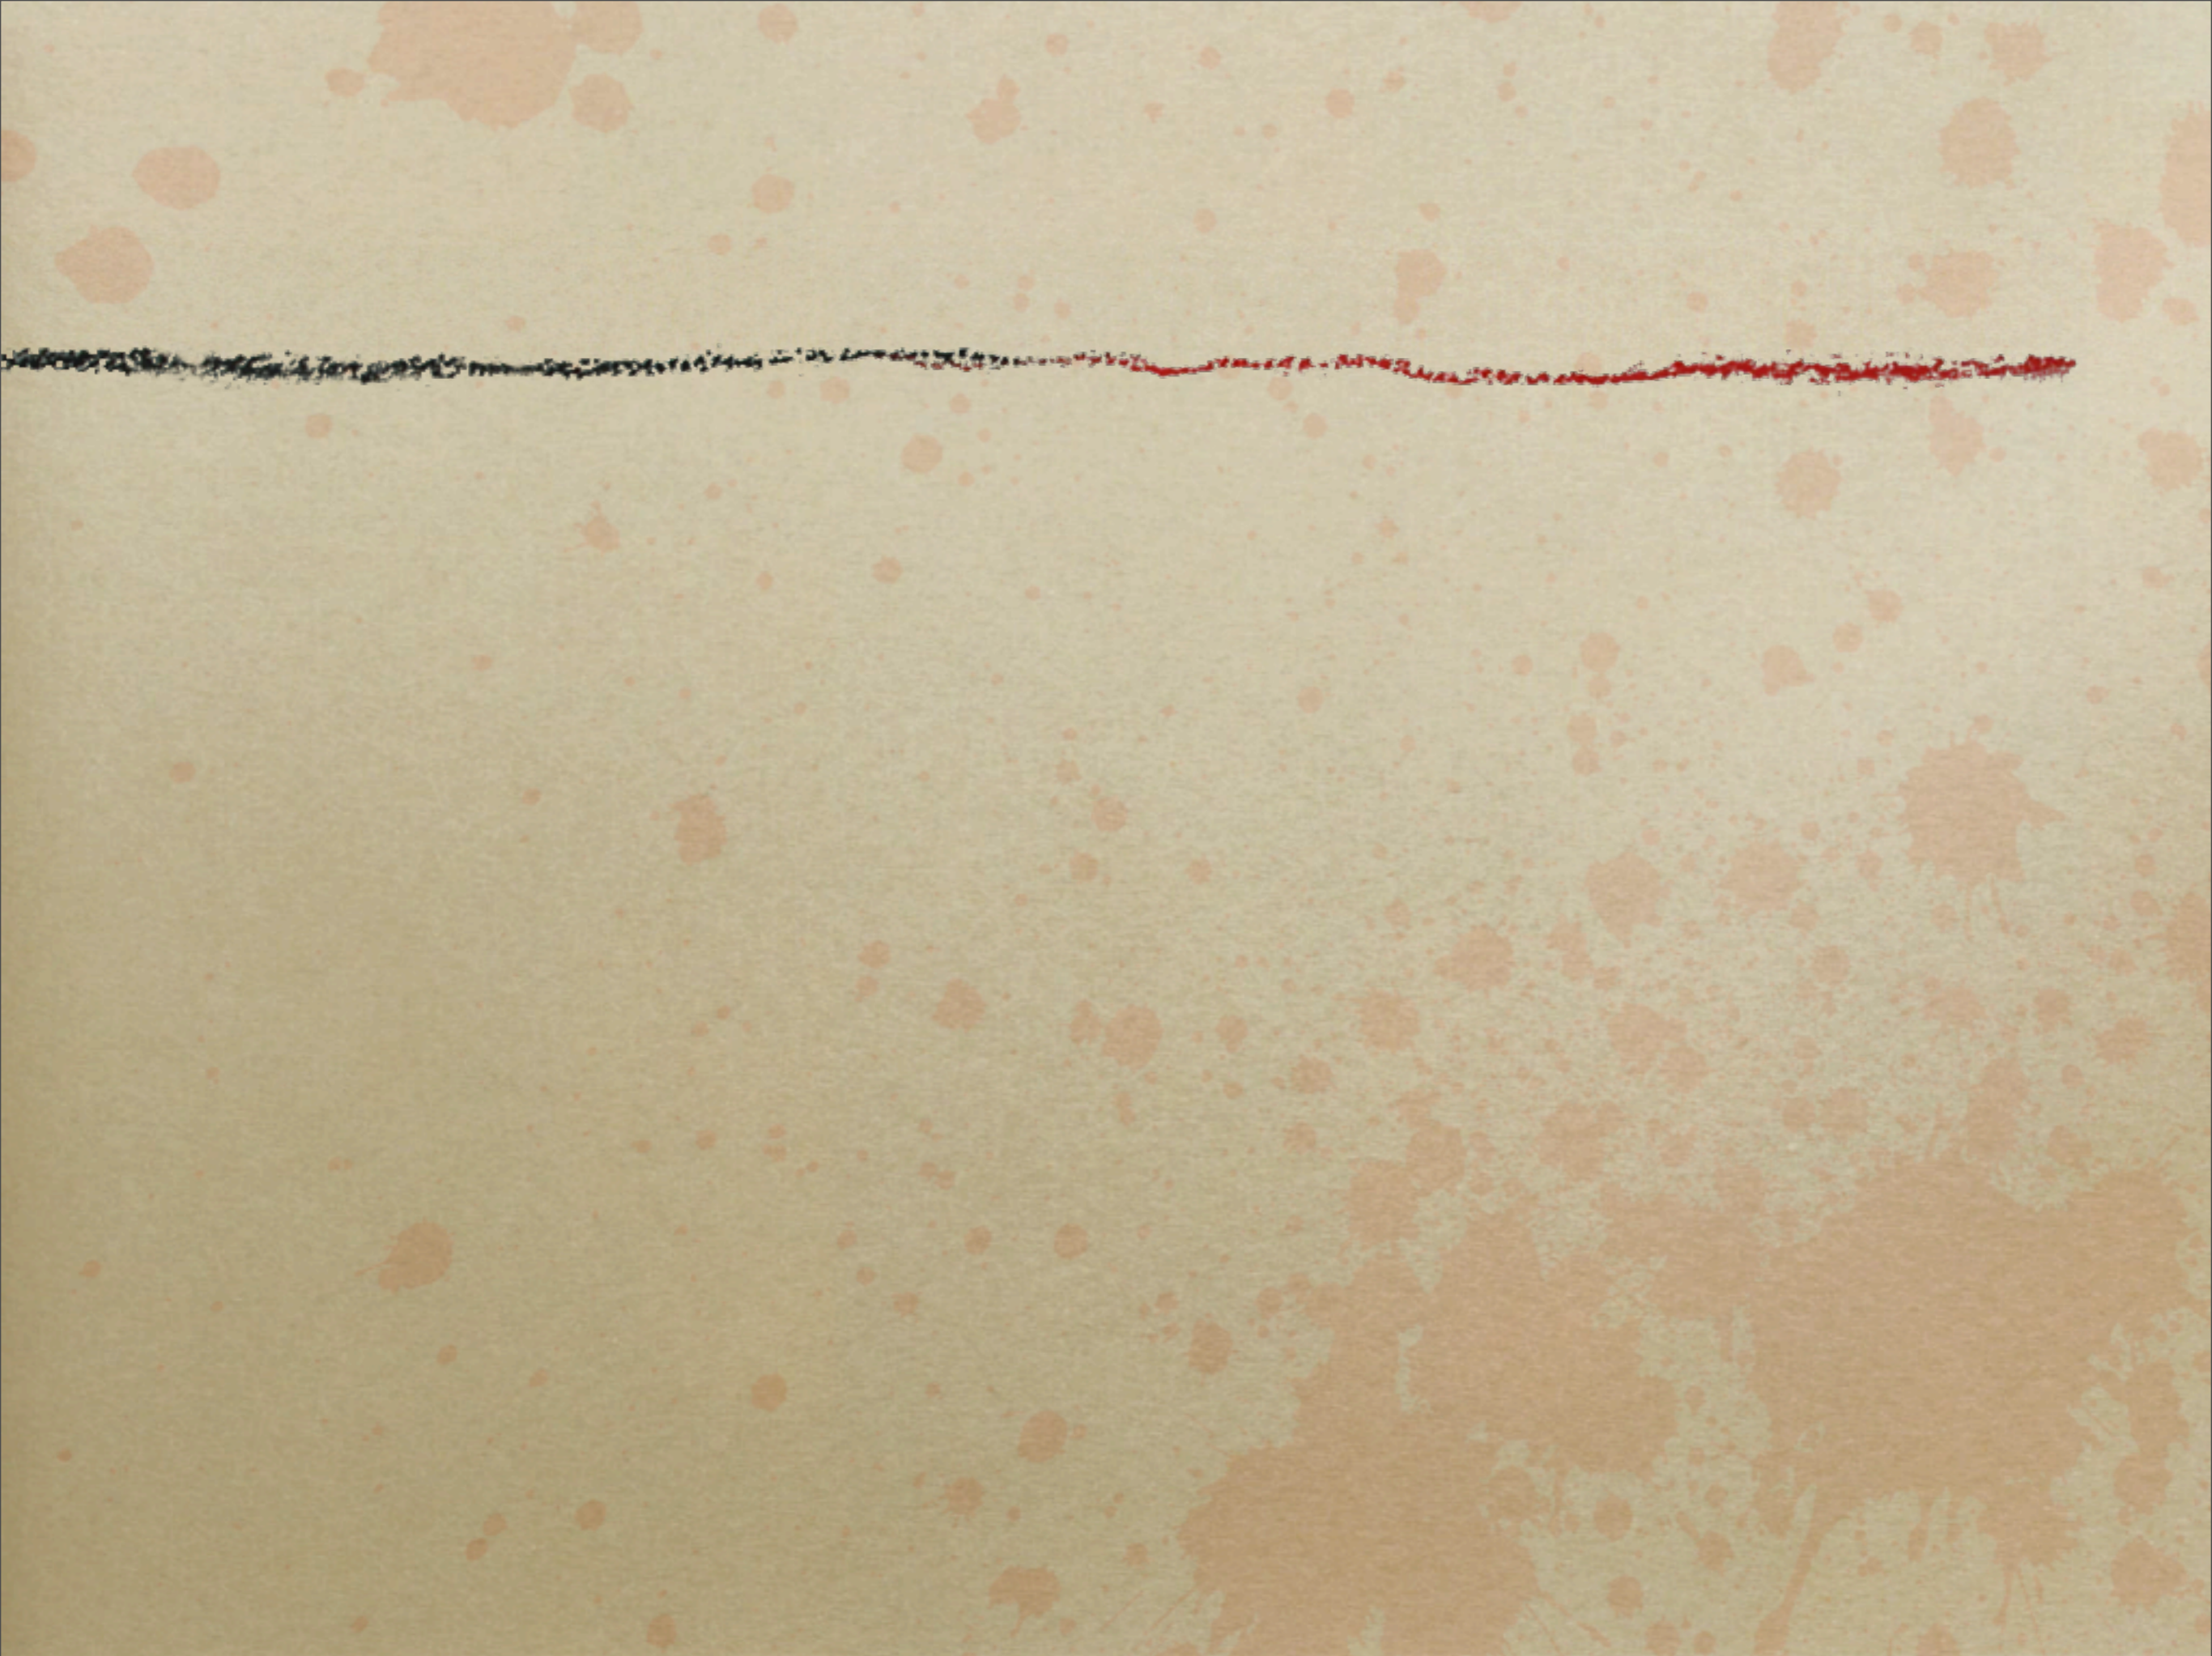

The Hunger Games

- Twelve Districts and a Capitol – Panem
- 24 tributes are chosen to fight – 1 boy & 1 girl from each District
– last man standing
- An age range is set in order to keep the tributes at an age where the games are more interesting to watch.
- The Games last a couple of weeks.
- The Capitol has luxuries and technology that most of the Districts do not.
- The entire reason the game take place is to show that the government is in control and without The Games the Districts would be nothing but disaster.

THE LOTTERY

THE LOTTERY

- Takes place in many villages, but the story focuses on one village.
- Lottery takes place annually on June 27th and last a few hours.
- All the families from the village gather in the square.
- The head of the families draw from the box.
- The villager live normal lives with little technology and luxuries.
- It is more of a tradition rather than control.

Are “honor killings” really an honor.

The government just wants to show their control so much that they want the civilians to kill each other.

Honor Killings?

- The government is killing children and teenagers to prove to the districts that they are in control.
- IT IS MORE SO A TRADITION, BUT THE VILLAGERS DO NOT WANT TO STOP BECAUSE THEY DO NOT KNOW WHAT WILL HAPPEN.

The background is a light beige or tan color, heavily textured with numerous brown and dark brown splatters, stains, and streaks of varying sizes and directions. A prominent, thick, horizontal red line runs across the upper third of the image, appearing slightly irregular and textured.

The people of Panem have little choice and have to do what the government says or else they will be killed.

Technology

- The Capitol live in luxury and has extremely advanced technology while the Districts furthest away little to no technology and live in poverty.
- The technology of the Capitol helps keep it in control of the Districts and if they start a rebellion against the Capitol, they would be able to stop it quickly.

300 people total in the village compared to 5,000 possible tributes of Panem

The Hunger Games last a few weeks while the lottery only takes a few hours both happen annually and have been going on for quite some time

“Tonight. After the reaping, everyone is supposed to celebrate. And a a lot of people do, out of relief that their children have been spared for another year. But at least two families will pull their shutters, lock their doors, and try to figure out they will survive the painful weeks to come”- Hunger Games

The village has a more of a working society than Panem because they could stop following the tradition and it would no one would do anything about it. If the people of Panem stop following what the government wanted them to do they would die and the uprising would not happen.

Government — Strict or Not Strict

- According to a video the government shows before the reaping, there was an uprising in District 13, so that is why the Games take place.
- In order for the government to keep as much power and control, they want the people to believe that this is what is best for them.
- THE GOVERNMENT IN THE VILLAGE IS NOT PUSHING THE PEOPLE AS MUCH AS THEY WANT TO DO IT BECAUSE OF TRADITION.

The background of the slide is a textured, light beige surface. It is covered with numerous small, irregular orange and grey splatters and stains. A prominent horizontal line, composed of a dark, textured black segment on the left and a red, textured segment on the right, runs across the upper portion of the slide, just below the title.

The Lottery Games

Government control happens within both of these stories and its ends badly for both. “The Lottery” has very little control from the government, but they want to stick with tradition. They lose one person each year to the lottery. The government has a very strong hold on the people in “The Hunger Games” and that cause twenty-three children and teenagers die.

Thank You

The background is a light beige or cream color, heavily textured with numerous splatters and stains. There are large, irregular greyish-brown stains, particularly on the left side, and smaller, more numerous orange and reddish-brown spots scattered across the entire surface. A thin, horizontal line runs across the upper third of the image, appearing as if it was drawn with a dry brush or chalk, with a dark grey/black stroke on the left and a reddish-brown stroke on the right.
