People-Focused Careers

Although the majority of military careers involve collaboration and coordination with fellow service members, some jobs are highly dependent on supporting and working with others. Below are just a few examples of the many roles where services members work closely together to make a significant impact.

INDUSTRIAL ENGINEERS

Industrial engineers work closely with others to manage research that determines the most effective ways for the Military to use its people and equipment. They conduct studies and oversee projects to optimize the use of time, money, materials, energy and other resources. These professionals create engineering processes to improve the efficiency and productivity of military operations. They also apply analysis and assessment methods to problems related to strategic planning, acquisitions and mission support.

OPTOMETRISTS

Optometrists perform comprehensive eye exams, during which they check patients' eyes for common eye diseases, assess how their eyes work together as a team, and evaluate their eyes as an indicator of their overall health. They also provide vision correction through vision training, glasses or contact lenses. They see service members of all ages and stages of vision development and degeneration, and refer patients with eye diseases to ophthalmologists.

EQUAL OPPORTUNITY (EO) MANAGERS

An important goal of EO managers is to create an environment free of discrimination and harassment, and address allegations of improper discriminatory conduct. EO managers implement EO policies and develop initiatives, such as training, to proactively combat discrimination. They assist in investigations of discrimination and/or sexual harassment and racial incidents. They may also conduct community relations work.
