Peptide F is an endogenous pro-enkephalin peptide found predominantly in the adrenal medulla; it is typically co-secreted with epinephrine. Peptide F exhibits immunostimulatory effects. In clinical settings, high levels of peptide F have been found in physically fit subjects, suggesting a potential link between fitness and immune function.

References