Guidelines for Letters to Editors

Letters should be original, double-spaced and succinct, and must include the author’s full name, mailing address, city of residency, agency (if relevant), daytime phone number and email address. (Mailing addresses, phone numbers and email addresses will not be printed, but may be used to verify authorship before printing.)

Letters may be edited for length or legal concerns, and will not be accepted if they thank lists of people or businesses, or may be rejected outright at the editor’s discretion. If possible, please type your letter when mailing or faxing.

Letters may be sent to:

Helpful Tips for Letters to Editors

The letters section is one of the most frequently read segments of newspapers. Letters to the editor are an easy and effective way to voice your opinion to policy makers, corporations and the general public. You can use letters to correct or interpret facts in response to inaccuracies, or to bring attention to your feelings and opinions.

Keep it simple
Keep your points short and clear, and stick to one subject. If you focus on one specific issue, you’ll already have an edge on the writer who thinks they will be able to fill up their letter with a laundry list of details. Also, stick to commonly used terms and avoid jargon.

Keep it short
Make your first sentence short, compelling and catchy. Be direct and engaging. Try to hold each sentence to a minimum of 20 words. For maximum readership, your whole letter best not exceed 150 words, whatever the paper’s maximum length policy. No more than four paragraphs total; two is best.

Get personal
Newspapers, at their core, are community entities. Editors will be much more likely to publish a letter, and the letter will have much more impact, if it demonstrates local relevance. The tips below are especially relevant if you are submitting a letter to the editor to your local paper.

- Speak on points of local relevance. For example, write a letter focusing on the preservation mission of Geauga Park District and its environmental benefits to that paper’s focal readership.
- Tell personal stories. For example, if you or someone in your family has had a positive experience in your parks, or in an exchange with Park District staff, talk about that experience.
- Use your credentials. If you have expertise in the area you are writing about, say so.
