So big, in fact, that we can't stop—won't stop reliving trends of the decade over and over again. From mom jeans to tiny sunglasses and bucket hats, we've seen the return of many of the era's key pieces over the past few years. The latest (and perhaps most polarizing yet) came from Steve Madden, who brings back two of his iconic '90s platform sandals for Summer 2019. They're the shoes you spend a great deal of '90s teetering through the mall or school hallways in (worn with a pair of capri pants, of course). They're also the shoes that have aggressively made loud flop noises while stomping around in all your teen anxiety glory. And now they're back for Summer 2019 in a new collaboration with Steve Madden and Urban Outfitters (though they may not have the same effect when worn to Hudson Yards). Flip flops are a polarizing enough shoe trend on their own. But platform flip flops? Our country may no longer be able to take divisions. My ankles and soul feel activated. And yet you can bet a batch of influencers and street-style stars will somehow make me nostalgic enough to want some this summer. But if you really team anti-flip flop, Steve Madden also has his iconic Slinky platform sandals for the collaboration. Presented in neon pink, lime green, and black, the retro sandal is back again—though this time you unfortunately can't wear them to Delia's. You may be able to find more information about this and similar content at piano.io Urban Outfitters Steve Madden's Slinky Platform Sandal, the iconic It Shoe the '90s, return to Urban Outfits. The shoe will be sold in lime, hot pink, and nostalgic black. Do you ever find yourself by seeing your closet and musings. I wish I returning to the late '90s when chunky wedges reigned supreme and each insecurity can be solved with a mini butterfly clip holding back exactly two pieces of hair? Well, the Steve Madden shoe lord heard your call. They launch a new capsule collection at Urban Outfitters that will feature the memorable peep toe chips with a colorful twist. The Slinky Platform Sandal ($70) is now available in the black you'll remember from the bait lewk you assembled for your last Ricky Martin concert, as well as jazzy neon pink and lime green for spring. There's also a retro-thong option ($60), if you're so inclined. Although Steve Madden previously released a similar version again in 2017, they were not presented in the trendy tone. And, of course, these aren't the first time urban outfits have really given in those '90s vibes. This any given moment, you can look through the website and haunt through (delighted by?) ghosts of your wardrobe past. From vintage-inspired Tommy Jeans logo shirts to FILA emblazoned crewnecks, they offer millennials a taste of the fashions that once lined the armoirs of many self-proclaimed '90s gals and guys. To that end, Steve Madden said in a press release. Since the beginning, it's been about platforms for us. We thought now was the perfect time to figure out these styles again in a fun and exciting way and there wasn't a better partner than Urban Outfitters. This content is imported from {embed-name}. While I'm still mad at myself for not having the views to know all my matching Adidas tracksuits will make a comeback — because there's nothing an weedy teen needs more than tear-basking ball pants in every color — I'm personally reluctant to relive this sartorial chapter. However, I'll say, if you're flirting with a purchase, there were few shoes more comfortable (or leg extended) than those oh-so-squishy chips. Back then, we could never have expected the iconic Steve Madden to re-emerge from our heyday (and the heydays of the Olsen Twins, Lizzie McGuire and the Spice Girls) as the shoe trend of the season just 12 years later. Alas, Steve Madden's throwback andale Back. And thanks to the founder himself, in partnership with Outfits, you can now buy some of its famous SLINKY platforms (now known as the SCRUNCHY) or the new, even as 90s-inspired CONTEMPO sandals by simply logging on to UrbanOutfitters.com. Since the beginning, it's been about platforms for us, Steve Madden, founder, Creative & Design Chief said in a press release. We now thought it was the perfect time to figure out these styles again in a fun and exciting way and there wasn't a better partner than Urban Outfitters. So before a hat of Spice Girls super fans buys every size, take a peak at the Steve Madden X Urban Outfitters capsule forward. If you thought the trends of the '90s are gone forever, think again. The nostalgia is still in full force from rainbowsnails to a revamped Laura Ashley collection. In April, Steve Madden and Urban Outfitters teamed up to bring back one of the most popular shoe trends from the '90s: platform halls. Steve Madden relaunched his cunning platform sandal a few years ago, and earlier this year they added two new colors: neon pink and lime green. It turns out people liked them so much that they were already sold out! The collaboration also includes platform thong sandals - which I'm sure many of us own at some point. Those sandals are currently on super-sales for $40, and are the perfect shoe to kick off Labor Day. Platform Thong Sandal Sandals
