Computational thinking

Thinking about problems in a way that allows computers to solve them. Computational thinking is something people do, not computers. It includes logical thinking and the ability to recognize patterns, think with algorithms, decompose a problem, and abstract a problem.