AMERICAN MILKING DEVON CATTLE

History of the Breed

In 1623, two heifers and a bull from north Devonshire England were received by a member of the Plymouth Colony. They were the first importation of cattle from Britain, although the Spanish had introduced cattle in the south.

Their overriding value was as draft animals to immediately go to work alongside the strong backs of the settlers. Cattle from Devonshire had long been recognized in England for their speed, intelligence, strength, willingness to work, and thrift ability to exist and prosper on poor forage, and in harsh climates.

In later years, other cattle were imported and contributed to the American Devon, which developed as the ideal multipurpose breed. None could surpass it for draft work; the milk was good for cream and cheese making; and the carcass developed prime beef on poor forage.

In 1868, the American Devon Herd Book, Volume 2 was published in Springfield, Massachusetts. In this herd book can be found the perfect description of Devon Cattle.

“The late experience of the breeders of Devons, only confirms their former opinion of the excellent qualities of the breed, for the three grand objects for which neat stock are kept, namely, milk, work, or beef, and their adaptation to many sections of our country, in preference to any other breed; also that they will produce as much milk, work, or beef, from the food consumed, or on a given quantity or land, as any other breed; their milk yielding a large amount of first quality cheese and cream, and the cream yielding a large amount of superior butter. The only objection ever presented to the breed, is 'they are small;' but we can keep more of them, and that on shorter pastures and coarser food. In short, as many pounds of beef, and of superior quality, can be produced with the Devons, on a given amount of food, as any other breed, though it may require more animals to do it.

In the northern portion of our country, and in the mountainous sections, and on the sterile soils of many farms, the Devons will always be in demand, as the most profitable breed that can be kept.”

In more recent times, the importance of cattle for draft animals has all but disappeared. With the widespread use of pasturization and the acceptance of fluid milk as a staple family food, the Devon was replaced by high producing dairy breeds like the Holstein and Jersey with whom it could not compete for quantity.

In 1952, the American Devon Cattle Club decided that the breed had to move into a specialist beef market in order to survive, and now competes successfully with Herefords and Angus as a meat producer.

At that time, a small group of breeders decided to form a separate association for dairy cattle and maintain dual-purpose stock. That association slowly dwindled, but thanks to their efforts, many of their animals can be traced into the new registry which was reformed in 1978. This registry represents a gene pool of genuine dual-purpose cattle able to survive and be productive under minimal management conditions in a harsh environment.

Breed Description

The Milking Devon is a dual-purpose breed adapted to survive on a low-quality, high-forage diet in harsh climatic conditions. They are healthy and long lived.

They can produce up to 12,000 pounds of milk and are light boned, yielding over 60 percent usable beef. The breed is a beautiful rich red color, sometimes with white on the tail switch, udder, or scrotum. They are horned, and must carry horns if they are to be shown.

They have a friendly temperament and make excellent family cows.

Rarity

Thanks to recent interest in the breed, the numbers are slowly creeping up currently in the region of 300 cows, most of whom are in New England with one herd in New York and one in West Virginia.

Introduction to the HERD BOOK

This first herd book for American Milking Devon Association is divided into two sections for bulls and two sections for cows.

The first section in each case is the “Foundation Register.” This deals with the pedigrees of animals which are not registered with this association, but whose parentage is known and who are themselves parents of cattle in the main registry. The numbers appearing after the names are tag numbers or registration numbers with other associations.

The second section in both males and females is for all the Milking Devon cattle registered with this association since its reformation in 1978. They appear in the form of:

Name (Tag No.) Registered No.

Date of Birth

Sire: Name (Identification No.) Registered No.

Dam: Name (Identification No.) Registered No.

Animals are listed in this section numerically under their herd of origin. Herds are listed in alphabetical order by breeders name.
