Natalia Brown has always been energized by the places where big ideas meet real-world consequences.

Natalia is an associate attorney in Keller Rohrback's Complex Litigation Group. She is drawn to litigation that sits at the intersection of law, science, and public policy and is particularly interested in cases involving environmental harms, public health, consumer protection, and mass disasters. Natalia was drawn to Keller Rohrback because of the firm's commitment to holding powerful actors accountable. She approaches litigation with intellectual curiosity, careful analysis, and a determination to understand the facts underlying each case.

Originally from South Florida, Natalia earned a B.S., magna cum laude, in Ecosystem Science & Policy from the University of Miami before graduating from Harvard Law School in 2026. Prior to law school, she worked in climate justice project management, conducted interdisciplinary research on chronic exposure to extreme humid heat and municipal climate adaptation, and contributed to disaster preparedness initiatives for people living with spinal cord injuries in partnership with major hospitals. Natalia also helped to lead her family's business for many years and spent a year working on a local farm in her hometown. Through these experiences, she developed a strong interest in the connection between science, public policy, and the law, as well as the role litigation can play in helping people and communities navigate the consequences of large-scale harms.

Natalia first joined Keller Rohrback as a Summer Associate in 2024 and returned as a law clerk and summer associate in 2025 before joining the firm full-time. While at Harvard, she served as an Editor-in-Chief of the Harvard Journal of Sports & Entertainment Law and as a Senior Editor of the Harvard Latin American Law Review. She also participated in Harvard's Environmental Law and Policy Clinic, Sports Law Clinic, and Dispute Systems Design Clinic, and was active in the Plaintiffs' Law Association and Women's Law Association. Her studies focused on complex litigation, environmental law, administrative law, and dispute resolution.

Outside of work, Natalia enjoys hiking, cooking for friends and family, and training for endurance races.
