Cat's eye excerpt: ^{the} Buried Marbles

Myste

1. Why do you think her brother buried marbles?

Diagnostic: the student received the feedback sheet and we discussed Success Criteria, text evidence and her use of inferences.

I think he buried the marbles so that they were like a time capsule or buried ^{treasure} treshur. Her brother ^{might} mite want to dig them up later to have memories of his childhood. Also he could want to dig them up later when they could be worth money. Lastly he could of not wanted ^{any} one to steal them and would dig them up later if he needed to (when he lost all his other marbles). There could be more possibillitys but I think those would be ^{bury} 3 main reasons why he would

After a Learning Conversation:
Two weeks after the Diagnostic, the student applies specific feedback, edits her own work and experiments with text evidence and an insightful understanding of the text.

by Grace Aurora Borealis or Northern

⇒ Though both texts are about ~~the same~~ ^{topic}, they are very different in ~~me~~ ^{topic}. The R.T. is more scientific because it's using all facts and it ~~use~~ ^{uses} more scientific complicated words like "Aurora Borealis". This makes the R.T. more directed for adults or teens. However Michael's story (I think) is more ^{directed} for kids because it has less ~~scientific~~ ^{complicated} words, (Northern lights instead of Aurora Borealis) also it uses an easy way to explain the Northern lights, saying it's souls playing soccer in the sky. Also adult's ~~teens~~ are more likely to listen to the radio ^(like Michael) than kids, and people who tell stories ^(like Michael) normally tell them to ~~kids~~ ^{children}. Who knew 2 text about the same thing could be so different!
