Cursive Writing Scavenger Hunt

Since the summer, I've participated in many online and offline conversations on cursive writing. My latest professional blog post on this topic, prompted an assistant principal from the States to start a cursive writing scavenger hunt. Now there are educators from all over the world (as far away as New Zealand) sharing examples of cursive writing. On my latest blog post, our vice principal, Mrs. Bishop, suggested a wonderful critical literacy/media literacy activity that ties to this scavenger hunt. To help us with this in-class activity, I'm asking all students to collect examples of cursive writing. You can ...

- Take photographs of them.
- Tweet photographs to me (@avivaloca) or using the hashtag #cursive.
- Draw pictures of what you see and bring them in.
- Collect samples of what you see and bring them in.
- Email photographs to me at aviva.dunsiger@hwdsb.on.ca. (Please try to reduce the size so that they don't take up too much space.)
- Add them to your personal blog.
- Or share them in any other way that works for you!

Thanks for your help with this!
