

Your spidey sense is tingling! Oh, wait, no, that was just an actual spider crawling up your leg.

No, wait, something was tingling... Ah! It was your treasure sense! And it was telling you that something valuable is buried under one of the four graves you see in front of you. It's hard to understand your treasure sense sometimes. It's pretty cryptic. Here's what you can suss out, though...

The names on all four of the graves are plainly visible on their headstones:

Arthur McTavish
Finnegan Smith
Nelson P. Bruckheimer
William J. Throckmorton

Unfortunately, the headstones have been heavily damaged. All the dates of birth and death have been chipped off in big chunks, which are lying scattered on the ground. You can make out the following years: 1908, 1913, 1918, 1923, 1987, 1992, 1997, 2002. You can tell that none of these graves was for a child.

(Your treasure sense also tells you that the gravedigger across the will take any single treasure you might have in exchange for an optional but potentially useful chart, if you don't like doing some basic math... You wish your treasure sense would just tell you which grave to dig up already, though!)

Finally, you get the sense that all of the following is true:

- 1. The man who was 74 when he died has the treasure.
- 2. The man born in 1918 did not die in 1997.
- 3. The man born earliest died first. Arthur died at the same age Nelson did.
- 4. William was born before Finnegan, but died after him. Arthur died before Finnegan.
- 5. Arthur was born before William but after Nelson.

You only have time to dig up one grave... Whose will it be?

(1)

Your spidey sense is tingling! Oh, wait, no, that was just an actual spider crawling up your leg.

No, wait, something was tingling... Ah! It was your treasure sense! And it was telling you that something valuable is buried under one of the four graves you see in front of you. It's hard to understand your treasure sense sometimes. It's pretty cryptic. Here's what you can suss out, though...

The names on all four of the graves are plainly visible on their headstones:

Arthur McTavish
Finnegan Smith
Nelson P. Bruckheimer
William J. Throckmorton

Unfortunately, the headstones have been heavily damaged. All the dates of birth and death have been chipped off in big chunks, which are lying scattered on the ground. You can make out the following years: 1908, 1913, 1918, 1923, 1987, 1992, 1997, 2002. You can tell that none of these graves was for a child.

(Your treasure sense also tells you that the gravedigger across the will take any single treasure you might have in exchange for an optional but potentially useful chart, if you don't like doing some basic math... You wish your treasure sense would just tell you which grave to dig up already, though!)

Finally, you get the sense that all of the following is true:

- 1. The man born in 1913 has the treasure.
- 2. Arthur and Nelson were the same age when they died.
- 3. William died after Nelson, who was born before Finnegan.
- 4. Finnegan died after Arthur, who died after William.
- 5. Nelson was born before Arthur, who was born before William.

You only have time to dig up one grave... Whose will it be?

(2)

Your spidey sense is tingling! Oh, wait, no, that was just an actual spider crawling up your leg.

No, wait, something was tingling... Ah! It was your treasure sense! And it was telling you that something valuable is buried under one of the four graves you see in front of you. It's hard to understand your treasure sense sometimes. It's pretty cryptic. Here's what you can suss out, though...

The names on all four of the graves are plainly visible on their headstones:

Arthur McTavish
Finnegan Smith
Nelson P. Bruckheimer
William J. Throckmorton

Unfortunately, the headstones have been heavily damaged. All the dates of birth and death have been chipped off in big chunks, which are lying scattered on the ground. You can make out the following years: 1908, 1913, 1918, 1923, 1987, 1992, 1997, 2002. You can tell that none of these graves was for a child.

(Your treasure sense also tells you that the gravedigger across the will take any single treasure you might have in exchange for an optional but potentially useful chart, if you don't like doing some basic math... You wish your treasure sense would just tell you which grave to dig up already, though!)

Finally, you get the sense that all of the following is true:

- 1. The man who was 89 when he died has the treasure.
- 2. Finnegan died after William, who died after Arthur. Nelson didn't die in 1987.
- 3. Finnegan died older than Arthur did, and William died older than Nelson.
- 4. The man who died in 2002 was born after the man who died in 1997, but before the man who died in 1992.
- 5. The man born in 1908 died before the man born in 1918, but after the man who died in 1913.

You only have time to dig up one grave... Whose will it be?

(3)

Your spidey sense is tingling! Oh, wait, no, that was just an actual spider crawling up your leg.

No, wait, something was tingling... Ah! It was your treasure sense! And it was telling you that something valuable is buried under one of the four graves you see in front of you. It's hard to understand your treasure sense sometimes. It's pretty cryptic. Here's what you can suss out, though...

The names on all four of the graves are plainly visible on their headstones:

Arthur McTavish
Finnegan Smith
Nelson P. Bruckheimer
William J. Throckmorton

Unfortunately, the headstones have been heavily damaged. All the dates of birth and death have been chipped off in big chunks, which are lying scattered on the ground. You can make out the following years: 1908, 1913, 1918, 1923, 1987, 1992, 1997, 2002. You can tell that none of these graves was for a child.

(Your treasure sense also tells you that the gravedigger across the will take any single treasure you might have in exchange for an optional but potentially useful chart, if you don't like doing some basic math... You wish your treasure sense would just tell you which grave to dig up already, though!)

Finally, you get the sense that all of the following is true:

- 1. The man who was born in 1908 has the treasure.
- 2. Arthur died earlier than the man who died at the same age he did.

3. The man who died in 1992 was born before the man who died in 1997, who was born before the man who died in 1987.
4. Finnegan was born before William, who was born before Nelson.
5. When he died, William was five years older than the youngest age that any of the men could possibly have been.

You only have time to dig up one grave... Whose will it be?

(4)

Your spidey sense is tingling! Oh, wait, no, that was just an actual spider crawling up your leg.

No, wait, something was tingling... Ah! It was your treasure sense! And it was telling you that something valuable is buried under one of the four graves you see in front of you. It's hard to understand your treasure sense sometimes. It's pretty cryptic. Here's what you can suss out, though...

The names on all four of the graves are plainly visible on their headstones:

Arthur McTavish
Finnegan Smith
Nelson P. Bruckheimer
William J. Throckmorton

Unfortunately, the headstones have been heavily damaged. All the dates of birth and death have been chipped off in big chunks, which are lying scattered on the ground. You can make out the following years: 1908, 1913, 1918, 1923, 1987, 1992, 1997, 2002. You can tell that none of these graves was for a child.

(Your treasure sense also tells you that the gravedigger across the will take any single treasure you might have in exchange for an optional but potentially useful chart, if you don't like doing some basic math... You wish your treasure sense would just tell you which grave to dig up already, though!)

Finally, you get the sense that all of the following is true:

- 1. The man who was 89 when he died has the treasure.
- 2. The man who was born in 1923 died after the man who was born in 1913. The man born in 1918 died after the man who was born in 1908.
- 3. Finnegan died ten years before Arthur did.
- 4. Nelson was born after Arthur and William.
- 5. William died after Arthur.

You only have time to dig up one grave... Whose will it be?

(5)

Your spidey sense is tingling! Oh, wait, no, that was just an actual spider crawling up your leg.

No, wait, something was tingling... Ah! It was your treasure sense! And it was telling you that something valuable is buried under one of the four graves you see in front of you. It's hard to understand your treasure sense sometimes. It's pretty cryptic. Here's what you can suss out, though...

The names on all four of the graves are plainly visible on their headstones:

Arthur McTavish
Finnegan Smith
Nelson P. Bruckheimer
William J. Throckmorton

Unfortunately, the headstones have been heavily damaged. All the dates of birth and death have been chipped off in big chunks, which are lying scattered on the ground. You can make out the following years: 1908, 1913, 1918, 1923, 1987, 1992, 1997, 2002. You can tell that none of these graves was for a child.

(Your treasure sense also tells you that the gravedigger across the will take any single treasure you might have in exchange for an optional but potentially useful chart, if you don't like doing some basic math... You wish your treasure sense would just tell you which grave to dig up already, though!)

Finally, you get the sense that all of the following is true:

- 1. The man born in 1918 has the treasure.
- 2. The man born in 1908 died the same age as the man who died in 1997.
- 3. The man who died in 2002 was born after Arthur.
- 4. Nelson died after William, who died after Arthur. Finnegan also died after William, but was born before him and Nelson.
- 5. The man born in 1908 died before the man born in 1918, who died before the man born in 1913.

You only have time to dig up one grave... Whose will it be?