והדבר אשר יקשה מכם תקרבוני אלי ושמעתי

“And whatever will be too difficult for you, you shall bring to me and I will hear it.” Devarim 1:17

Quite often we find a great deal of psychological wisdom contained in the words of the Torah. It is common knowledge in the practice of psychology that in the process when the client or patient is describing their particular problem they discover a solution. King Solomon tells us in Proverbs 12:25 – “if one is worried let him relieve himself of it.” The Talmud explains this to mean that if one is worried about something he should speak it over with another person, because this will bring relief. The Gerer Rebbe said that this idea can be seen in the words of Moshe Rabbeinu that if you have something difficult, bring it to me and I will listen to it. Moshe doesn't say he will solve it – he said he will listen. Simply by asking, and allowing the other person to describe the problem, one may help the person find its solution. This is a very important point which goes a long way in fostering healthy relationships, love and comradery, because many times what people crave is just a listening, sympathetic ear.

It shows that we care and we are here for you, and that can go a long way in removing worry and fear from a person's heart. This Tisha B'Av, let's do our part in creating an atmosphere of more love and that can be done with a little less talking and a lot more listening.

Sefer: Living each week

Wishing all of you an inspiring Shabbos and an easy and meaningful fast!
