Shabbos Nachamu Parshas Vaeschanan, August 20, 2016

Rabbi Moshe Gruenstein
President Menno Ratzker

ואהבת את ה' אלקך בכל לבבך

“You should love G-d with all your heart.”

Bamidbar 6:5

The great biblical commentator, Rashi, says an amazing insight on this verse that we have expounded upon in the past. Rashi says that the one who serves G-d out of love has no comparison to the one who serves G-d out of fear. For if you serve your master out of fear then once the burden gets to be too great, the servant will just get up and leave!

These words of Rashi should be photocopied and placed on every refrigerator of every home with young children. If parents are too strict with their children, if there is too much disapproval and too many no's, then while the children are young they will listen to you but once they get older they will flee & rebel. Of course, in educating children there must be rules and consequences but it must be tempered with a lot of love, compliments, warmth and sensitivity, (no shouting or yelling). Then and only then will one be successful in raising children that they will have a long-lasting relationship with and hopefully be dedicated to the observance of Torah and Mitzvos.

Shabbos Nachamu Parshas Vaeschanan, August 20, 2016

To force children to do mitzvos, to force them to come to Shul will not work and will only further disenfranchise them from Judaism. Rashi is teaching us love is the key. It's a simple, common sense, straightforward idea, but sometimes it's the simple facts of life that we so often forget! We of course all love our children but they have to see it and feel it. By doing so we will, G-d willing, only see nachas from them.

Wishing all of you an inspiring Shabbos!

Rabbi Moshe Gruenstein
