Everyone treasures a sincere compliment. It is an inexpensive way to spread good cheer and bring out the best in people. It is especially true with your spouse and children. Criticism should be used sparingly in the home; constant criticism is such a downer and creates a very heavy and depressing environment. Criticism unfortunately comes naturally and automatically, whereas compliments are not an automatic response. Our job (especially during these days) is to train ourselves to the point that compliments come naturally and criticism comes sparingly.
