The Weekly Parsha

From the Orchards of Jerusalem

by Daneal Weiner

Omer Tov! And we're into the Tov!!! The time period of the Omer is referred to as "Lev Tov" — a good heart for various reasons. It also just so happens that "Lev" has the gematria 32, referring to the first 32 days. "Tov" has the gematria 17, the last 17 days, starting with the 33rd day of the Omer, Lag b'Omer. $32 + 17 = 49$! And it says in verses 23:15, 16 of this week's Parshas Emor,

"You shall count for yourselves ... fifty days." We do, in fact, only count 49 days. We do not get up Shavuot night and count the 50th day. A tremendous topic of information, beyond the scope of this paper. (I always try to add one of those in every once in a while.) Ask your local competent Orthodox Rabbi. It used to be, "Ask your local Rabbi." Then, "Ask your local Orthodox Rabbi." Now it's "Ask your local competent Orthodox Rabbi." That's within the scope of this paper!

Parshas Emor has in it all the biblical holidays and then some. After finishing its discussion of Sukkos it suddenly talks about the Menorah and the Show-bread. The Menorah, the symbol of spirituality, reflects the defeat of the Hellenists' attempt to spiritually destroy the Jews. That's Emor's mention of Chanukah. The Show-bread, the symbol of the physicality of Bnei Yisrael, reminds us of the reversal of Haman's plans to physically destroy us! Emor's mention of Purim. Maybe we can add another holiday to the list in Emor? What's the next subject discussed? Oh — the blasphemer ... moving right along ...

Emor is also read on the Diaspora's second day Yom Tov. Not all of it, of course, only the portion largely regarding the very holidays on which it's read. Interestingly, we don't start to read this portion from the verse, "These are the appointed times," which sounds like a pretty good place to start when wanting to read about the appointed times. Rather we start five verses earlier (22:27), "When an ox or a sheep or a goat is born it shall remain under its mother seven days and from the eighth day it is acceptable for a fire offering." What is the relevance of this awkward starting point?

Rav Wolfson points to the Targum Yonasan on this verse for a remarkable insight. He translates it adding that when the order of the korbanos-sacrifices is mentioned, those animals brought year after year, since our sins caused that we do not have where to bring them, the ox was chosen in remembrance of Avraham, the sheep for Yitschak and the goat for Yaakov. The Targum Yonasan takes this verse from a section speaking about the sanctity of the Sanctuary and the offerings and says it's talking about the exile! Specifically when there are no sacrifices!! And we are riding on the merits of our forefathers!!! Hashem is "Notser chesed l'alaphim" — a preserver of kindness for thousands of generations. The Targum tells us that's what the Torah is saying right here in Emor!

In the merit of Avraham Aveinu who saw three arab idolaters and he washed the dust from their feet and he gave them each the finest meal from the choicest of his herd. All this for the opportunity to teach them about the living G-d.

Rashi says there that dust was worshipped by idolaters and so Avraham cleaned their feet and then served them like kings. May it be G-d's will that in our lowly generation, a generation in the FEETsteps of the Mashiach, a generation covered in the dust of 1900 years of assimilation, He simply wash the dust from us and serve us from the great ox and leviathan, the best of His creations being saved for the righteous after the coming of the Mashiach.

In the merit of Yitschak who asked that he be bound to the altar, like a sheep, so any flinching wouldn't invalidate his father's slaughtering. And who then stretched out his neck in sanctification of G-d's name. May it be G-d's will to accept our binding ourselves to higher standards in a world striving for mediocrity and triviality. To accept our wrapping ourselves in Torah and mitsvos, in a world that has shunned responsibility for self-gratification. And to accept our stretching out our hands and ourselves in charity and in chesed and in learning, with the money, resources and time we scarcely have.

In the merit of Yaakov who cooked a goat for his father and merited the blessings while donning the skins of Eisav, may it be G-d's will to be satisfied with the little we have to offer Him and bless us, even though we also don the skins of Eisav. We might not be at Bechukosai yet, but Emor shows us there is tremendous hope!

This week's haftorah is from the prophet Yechezkel. Like Emor, the haftorah opens with laws of the Kohanim-priests, to be applicable after the building of the third Temple. The problem is that some of these laws seem to contradict laws mentioned in the Torah. The ArtScroller Rebbe footnotes that Rashi brings Midrashic commentaries on these verses implying that they can't be taken in their literal sense due to these contradictions. This chapter is therefore meant to be a "vehicle for the exegetical interpretations that underlie the verses." The whole Messianic era is a mystery to us so it is no wonder that these related verses are also shrouded in mystery. The Gemorah Menachos says in the name of R. Yochanan that we will have to wait for the prophet Elyahu to explain these verses for us.

The Ari HaKadosh, on the other hand, points to the first verse of the haftorah, "The Priest Levite sons of Tsaddok" Well, were they Priests or Levites? Granted, all priests are from the tribe of Levy, but it has been pretty well established to refer to a Jew as one or the other, not both. The Ari HaKadosh says BOTH! When Hashem told us back in Shmos (19:6), "You shall be to Me a kingdom of priests" He meant it! There will be a time when every Jew will minister for the nations of the world! This, by the way, is what Korach foresaw. He wanted to speed things up so he complained against Moshe and Aharon and their "exclusive" appointments of the priesthood. We'll see more on that soon. This idea from the Ari HaKodesh answers up one of the contradictions! The very last verse of Emor's Haftorah says that the Kohanim can't eat a naturally killed animal. Pointing to them and saying THEY can't is the same as saying that everyone else CAN!! Heaven forbid any Jew eat a non-kosher animal! But now that we know that all Bnei Yisrael will be priests, the "everyone else" who "can" are the nations of the world. They can eat all the roadkill they want!

What a comforting and promising Parsha. What a wonderful haftorah! What a great boost to really make these final "tov" days of the Omer "tov m'ode"-very good!!!

Have a hopeful, inspiring, reconnecting, spiritually tov m'ode Shabbat Shalom.
