

Email - Attaching files using drag-and-drop

While in Windows Explorer, select one or more files, then drag these over to the Task-Bar and hover over the icon of your browser, as shown here on the left. On “hover over” the icon, Windows will display as snippet of the current instances of that browser. (As per this screenshot, only one of the Chrome browser is running.) Don't let go of the clicked-mouse yet!

While in Windows Explorer, select one or more files, then, drag these over to the Task-Bar and hover over the icon of your browser, as shown here on the left. Don't let go of the clicked-mouse yet. Read more, as per following.

Now, while the files are still selected, move the mouse over to the snippet of the browser showing IQTEll, where you're currently composing the email. You can now drop the file(s) anywhere inside the email that you're currently composing.

If these are non-image files, e.g., *.docx, *.pdf, etc., these file will be added to the attachments. If any of the selected files are type image, e.g., *.png, *.jpg, etc., the corresponding images will be embedded in the email were you drop them.
