

Govind and the Deer

Long ago, in a faraway land lived a young boy called Govind. One day, he rode into the forest, where he saw a lovely baby deer. It was sitting next to his mother. The deers had heard the horse, but they did not run.

When Govind saw the baby deer, he wanted to keep him as a pet, as it had a pretty white mark on its forehead.

I will keep it in my house

he said.

He caught the baby deer, picked it up, and jumped on his horse to go back. The poor mother ran after his horse because she wanted her baby back. Govind turned around and looked into her eyes and saw tears

He was a kind man and was sad when he saw her crying. "A mother's tears," he thought and gave back her son.

We must be kind to each other.
