

The Cross-Eyed King

Once upon a time, there lived a cross-eyed king. He was a proud king, and he wanted a handsome portrait made of himself, so he asked one young artist to do it.

Because the king was cross-eyed, the young artist did not know how to make his king look handsome. So, he went to his father, who was a very good artist himself.

His father told him,

"Everybody looks good one way or the other. Make a portrait of your king holding a bow and arrow, then ask him to aim. As one eye of his will be closed, no one will notice that he is cross-eyed."

The artist did what his father told him, and he made a wonderful portrait of the king.

Very often, we only look at the bad things in people and forget the good ones.

We must look for the good in everybody.
