

The Generous Poet

There lived a great poet called Magh. He was very well known for his work. Over the years he became a rich man. As he was kind and generous he used to share his wealth. After a while his wealth got over and he became quite poor. He had no more wealth to share. Often he had to turn away very needy people and that made him sad.

One day the king called him to his court and Poet Magh recited a wonderful poem. The king was very pleased and gave him a huge reward. Magh was now happy with joy in his heart as he returned home.

On the way he met a very needy person. He gave him some money that he had just earned. Then, he met many more needy people. He gave them all some money. Soon he was left with nothing. Yet Magh was happy that he could share his wealth.

We should be happy to share our things.