

The Dressing Of The Truth

It was summer, and the truth and untruth went to take a bath in the river, took off their clothes, and dived in. They were happily swimming until untruth got an idea.

She came out from the river, put on the truth's dress, and left. When the truth came out and saw her dress was gone, she said, "It is not good to go naked among people, so let me wear the dress which is left behind."

Since that day, they have been walking among the people who didn't know which one is which because of their appearance.

Things to think about: We should look for authenticity rather than the outer appearance. Don't be deceived by appearance. What we see with our eyes can be deceptive because the sincere things are inside. It can not be seen with our eyes, heard with our ears, or touched by our hands. It is beyond all the senses. It resides in our central core.

Because of its intangible presence, we can perceive
the tangible world.
